[illegible] the following particulars regarding the united French and Spanish expeditions:

"The allied troops are encamped in a very advantageous position, and are provided with water and provisions in abundance. The term of ten days fixed by the Admiral for the reply of the Annamite Government to the dispatches which he sent it had expired. The Emperor of Cochin-China had shown no sign of activity. The expedition had made a favorable impression on the Christians of the country, who were communicating with them. The Apostolic Vicar of Northern Cochin-China, M. Pazzaini, Bishop of Biblos, had for two months to seek refuge in the mountains, with a number of Christians who had fled from the persecution of the Idolaters. The party found shelter in the Province of Quang-Nau, in the south. A visit was expected at the camp of several French and Spanish ecclesiastics. The camp had begun to assume the appearance of a little town. The ships continued their investigations along the coast. At the extremity of the bay was found the Bay of Tai-fau, where the Chinese junks trading with Cochin China land their merchandise. The state of the forces at the disposal of the Emperor of Annam was not yet precisely known, but it was believed that they consisted of 12,000 to 15,000 men, armed with ordinary French or American muskets. The capital is fortified. The Roman Catholic clergy of the empire are composed of three hundred priests, of whom nearly the sixth part are natives. The allied troops pass their time in exercises and promenades. Their movements are commanded by the admiral in person, who is well seconded in his duties by the commanders of the French marines and of the Spanish expedition-ary corps."

We have dates from Table Bay to the 22d of October. Sir George Grey had returned to Cape Town from the frontier. Mutual concessions had been made between Moshesh and the Free State. Affairs, however, continued rather unsettled on the frontier.

The small-pox continued very virulent, especially among the colored population.

The general elections were still in progress.

The dates from Liberia are to Nov. 15, Sierra Leone, 20th; Cameroons, Oct. 29, &c.

Trade was depressed on the coast.

The United States frigate Niagara had arrived with the recaptured slaves.

A French vessel was on the coast shipping "slaves." The Liberians sought and received protection from the Niagara and the Alecto. The French vessel subsequently left the coast.

The war with the Grebboes had terminated—the English Government to receive an indemnity of £10,000. The majority of the settlers at Fernando Po had determined to leave, on account of its being made a penal settlement.

TUESDAY EVENING.—The Funds to-day were rather flat during the greater part of the day. Consols were quoted at a fresh reduction of ¼ ⅌ cent., owing solely to the arrangements in connection with the monthly settlement. The supply of stock afloat in the market has greatly increased. The speculators for the rise are, consequently, less overweighed with stock. At any other period a more decided stimulus would, probably, have been imparted, by the increased firmness of the Exchanges, and the influx of gold into the Bank. In the other markets the tendency was satisfactory. In the discount market to-day there was a good deal of activity, but a large supply of money. The amount of gold sent into the Bank to-day was £184,000. The purchases effected to-day for the Continent represent only £30,000.

The Foreign Exchanges, this afternoon, were generally firmer in tendency, bills being in less demand.

The Australian Overland telegram is now several days overdue.

The Special Correspondent of the Times in India gives a new version of the Cawnpore massacre, the details of which are, in some respects, more shocking than any previous accounts.

The Times publishes a proclamation issued by Lord CLYDE, on his recommencing the campaign in Oude, announcing that when there is no resistance no plundering will be allowed, but wherever there is resistance by even a single shot fired against the troops, the inhabitants must expect to incur the fate they have brought upon themselves, their houses will be burnt and their villages plundered.

TUESDAY EVENING.

This has been settling day in the English funds, and the fact of numerous operations for a rise recently entered into by weak speculators, having to be closed or carried forward, caused the market to open heavily and to experience a further temporary depression. Notwithstanding the approach of the end of the year, there was renewed ease in the discount market to-day, the minimum being 2½ @ 2¾. To-day the French 3 ⅌ cent. rentes at Paris closed at a rise of ¼ ⅌ cent.

Owing to the gravity of the questions regarding Mexico and Nicaragua, as well as the necessity for meeting a deficiency in the revenue by a loan, some additions to the American President's Message will, this year, be looked for with more than ordinary interest. The Message is expected to reach Liverpool on Sunday week.

The Times, in a leading article, opposes the idea of another Great Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations to be held in London in 1861.

A SPEECH BY DICKENS.

Mr. Charles Dickens' Address at an Educational Meeting in Manchester.

CHARLES DICKENS was appointed chairman of a public meeting held at Manchester, to distribute prizes to competitors at recent examinations of pupils at the evening schools,—made up entirely of mechanics and laboring men. His speech, which explains the objects and success of the institution, is thus reported in the Guardian:

The Chairman, (Mr. DICKENS,) who was received with acclamation as he rose to address the meeting, said: It has of late years become noticeable in England that the Autumn season produces an immense amount of public speaking. I notice that no sooner do the leaves begin to fall from the trees than pearls of great price begin to fall from the lips of the wise men of the East and North, West and South; and anybody may have them by the bushel for the picking up. [Laughter.] Now, whether the comet has this year had a quickening influence on this crop, as it is by some supposed to have had upon the corn harvest and the vintage, I do not know. But I do know that I have never observed the columns of the newspapers to groan so heavily under the pressure of orations, each vieing with the other in the text, especially that having little or nothing to do with the matter in hand—[laughter]—and of being always addressed to any audience in the wide world, rather than the audience to which it was delivered. [Hear, hear.] The audience being gone, and the Winter come, I am so sanguine as to hope that we in our proceedings may break through this enchanted circle and deviate from this precedent, the rather as we have something really to do, and are come together, I am sure, in all plain fellowship and straightforwardness to do it. We have no little straws of our own to throw up, to show us which way any wind blows. At the top of the public announcements of this meeting are the words, "Institutional Association of Lancashire and Cheshire." Will you allow me, in reference to the meaning of these words, to present myself before you as the embodied spirit of ignorance recently enlightened, and to put myself through a short voluntary examination as to the results of my studies? To begin with the title. It does not suggest to me anything in the least like the truth. I have been for some years pretty familiar with the terms "Mechanics' Institutions," and "Literary Societies;" but they have unfortunately too often become associated in my mind with a body of great pretensions, lame as to some important member or other, which generally wants something done for it that it can't do for itself, which generally inhabits a new house much too large for it, and which is very seldom paid for, and which takes the name of the mechanics most grievously in vain, for I have usually seen a mechanic and a dodo in that place together. [Laughter.] I therefore began my education in respect of the meaning of this title very coldly indeed, saying to myself "Here is the old story." But the perusal of a very few lines of my book soon gave me to understand that this Association is designed to correct the old story, and to prevent its defects from becoming perpetuated. I learned that this Institutional Association is the union in one central head of 114 local institutions and mutual improvement societies, at an expense of no more than 5s. to each society, suggesting to all how they can best communicate with, and profit by, the fountain-head and one another, keeping their best aims steadily before them, advising them how those aims can be best attained, giving direct end and object to what might otherwise easily become waste forces, and sending among them not only oral teachers, but, better still, boxes of excellent books, called "Free Circulating Libraries." I learn that these books are constantly making the circuit of hundreds upon hundreds of miles, and are constantly being read with inexpressible relish by thousands upon thousands of toiling people, and that they are never damaged or defaced by one rude hand. [Hear, hear.] This and other like facts led me to consider the immense importance of this fact—that no little cluster of working-men's cottages can rise in any Lancashire or Cheshire valley, at the foot of any running stream which enterprise hunts out for water power, but it has its educational friend and companion ready and willing for it, acquainted with its thoughts and ways, and turns of speech and thought, even before it had come into existence. This is the main consideration that has brought me here. No central association at a distance could possibly do for those working-men what this local association does. No central association at a distance could understand them, could possibly put them in that familiar and easy communication one with another, so that a man or boy eager for knowledge, in the valley seven miles off, should know of a man or boy eager for knowledge, in the valley twelve miles off, and should occasionally trudge to meet him, that the one might impart his learning in one branch of acquisition to the other. Yet this is a distinct and most important feature of this Society. On the other hand it is not to be supposed that these honest men, however zealous, should as a rule succeed in establishing and maintaining their own institutions of themselves. It is obvious that combination must materially diminish their cost, in itself a vital consideration; and that experience, which is essential to the success of all combination, is especially so when its object is to diffuse the results of experience and of reflection. But the student of the pleasant and profitable history of this Society does not stop here in his learning. He finds with interest and pleasure that the Parent Society at certain stated periods invites the more eager and enterprising members of the local societies to submit themselves to voluntary examination in various branches of useful knowledge, of which examination it takes the charge and arranges the details, and invites the successful candidates to come to Manchester, and receive the prizes and certificates of merit which it impartially awards. The most successful of the competitors in the last of these examinations are now among us; and those little marks of recognition and encouragement, I shall have the pleasure of giving them presently. I have looked over a few of the examination papers. They comprise history, geography, grammar, arithmetic, book-keeping, decimal coinage, mensuration, mathematics, social economy, the French language—in fact, they comprise all the keys that unlock the locks of knowledge. I felt most devoutly grateful, as to many of them, that they had not been submitted to me to answer. [Hear, hear, and laughter.] For I am perfectly clear if they had been, I should have had mighty little to bestow upon myself to-night. [Laughter.] And yet it is always to be observed, and seriously remembered, that these examinations are undergone by people whose lives have been passed in a continual fight for bread, and whose whole existence has been a constant wrestle with those twin gaolers of the daring heart—low birth and iron fortune. [Applause.] I could not but consider with extraordinary admiration that these questions have been replied to, not by men like myself, the business of whose life is with writing and with books, but by men the business of whose life is with tools and machinery. Let me name a few of the most interesting cases of prize-holders and certificate-gainers who will appear before you. There are two poor brothers from near Chorley who work from morning till night in a coalpit, and who, in all weathers, have walked eight miles a night, three nights a week, to attend the classes in which they have gained distinction. [Hear, hear.] There are two other poor boys from Bolington, who began life as pieceers at a shilling and eighteen pence a week, and the father of one of whom was cut to pieces by the machinery at which he worked, but not before he had himself founded the institution in which this son has since come to be taught. These two poor boys have taken the second-class prize in chemistry. [Hear, hear.] There is a plasterer from Bury, sixteen years of age, who took a third-class certificate last year at the hands of Lord Ebrington, and who has exerted himself so strenuously since that time in his trade as to be again successful in a competition three times as severe. [Hear, hear.] There is a wagon maker from the same place, who knew little or absolutely nothing until he was a grown man, and who has learned all he knows, which is a great deal, in the local institution. There is a chain maker, in very humble circumstances, and working hard all day, who walked six miles a night, three nights a week, to attend the classes in which he has won a famous place. There is a moulder in an iron foundry who, while he was working twelve hours a day before the furnace, got up at 4 o'clock in the morning to learn drawing. [Hear, hear.] "The thought of my lads," he writes in his modest account of his work, in their peaceful slumbers sometimes gave me fresh courage; and I used to think that if I should never receive any other benefit I might instruct them when they came to be of an age to understand the mighty machines and engines which have made our country, England, pre-eminent in the world's history." [Applause.] There is a piecer at mule frames, who could not read at eighteen, who is now a man of little more than thirty, who is the sole support of an aged mother, who is arithmetical teacher in the institution in which he himself was taught, who reports of himself that he made the resolution never to take up a subject without keeping to it, and who has kept to it with such an astonishing will that he is now well versed in Euclid and in algebra, and is the best French scholar in Stockport. [Hear, hear.] The drawing classes in that same Stockport are taught by a working blacksmith, and his pupils will receive the highest honors of to-night. [Applause.] To pass from the successful candidates of the delegates from local societies, and to content myself with one instance, there is among their number a most remarkable man, whose history I have read with feelings that I could not adequately express under any circumstances, and least of all when I know he hears me—who worked when he was a mere baby at handloom weaving until he dropped from fatigue; who began to teach himself as soon as he could earn five shillings a week, who is now a botanist, and acquainted with every production of the Lancashire valleys; who is now a naturalist; who has made and preserved a collection of eggs of British birds, and stuffed the birds; who is now a conchologist with a very curious and, in some respects, original collection of fresh-water shells; who has also collected and preserved the mosses of fresh waters and of the sea; who is worthily the President of his own literary institution, and who was at his work the time last night as foreman in a mill. ["Hear, hear," and applause.] So stimulating has been the influence of these bright examples and many more, that I notice among the applications from Blackburn for preliminary testing examination papers, one from an applicant who gravely describes himself as ten years of age; and who, with equal gravity, describes his occupation as "nursing a little child." [Hear, hear, and laughter.] Nor are these things confined to the men. The women employed in factories, in millinery, and in domestic service, have begun to show, as it is fitting they should, a most decided determination not to be outdone by the men. The women of Preston, in particular, have so honorably distinguished themselves, and show, in their examination papers, such an admirable knowledge of the sense of household management and economy, that if I were a working bachelor of Lancashire or Cheshire, and if I had not cast my eye, or set my heart, on any lass in particular, I should positively get up at 4 o'clock in the morning, with the determination of the iron-moulder himself, and should go to Preston in search of a wife. ["Hear," and laughter.] These instances, and many more daily occurring, always accumulating, are surely better testimony to the working of this Association than any number of speakers could possibly present to you. Surely, the presence among us of these indefatigable people is the Association's best and most affecting triumph, in the present and the past, and is its noblest stimulus to action in the future. As its temporary mouthpiece, I would beg to say to that portion of the company who attend to receive the prizes, that the Institution can never hold itself apart from them, can never set itself above them—that their distinction and success must be its distinction and success, and there can be but one heart beating between them and it. In particular, I would most especially entreat them to observe that nothing will ever be further from the Association's mind than the impertinence of patronage. [Applause.] The prizes and certificates that it gives are mere admiring assurances of sympathy with so many striving brothers and sisters, and are only valuable for the spirit in which they are given and received. The prizes are of money simply because the Institution does not presume to doubt that people who have so well governed themselves know best how to make a little money serviceable. [Hear, hear.] Reverting once more to the whole collective audience before me,—of the advantages of knowledge I have said, and shall say, nothing. Of the certainty with which the man who grasps it under difficulties rises in his own respect and in usefulness to the community I have said and shall say nothing. In the city of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, both so remarkable for self-taught men, that were superfluous indeed. For the same reason I rigidly abstain from putting together any of the shattered fragments of that poor clay image of a parrot which was once always saying without knowing why, or what it meant, that knowledge was a dangerous thing. [Hear, hear.] I should as soon think of piecing together the mutilated remains of any wretched Hindoo who has been blown away from an English gun. Both, creatures of the past, have been, as my friend Mr. CARLYLE, vigorously has it, "blasted into space," and there, as to this world, is an end to them. So I desire, in conclusion, only to sound two strings. In the first place, let me congratulate you upon the progress which real mutual improvement societies are making at this time in your neighborhood, through the noble agency of individual employers and their families, whom you can never too much delight to honor—[hear, hear]—elsewhere through the agency of the great railway companies, some of which are bestirring themselves in this matter with a gallantry and generosity deserving of all praise. Secondly, and lastly, let me say one word out of my own personal heart, which is always very near to it in this connection. Do not let us, in the midst of the visible objects of nature, whose workings we can tell off in figures; surrounded by machines that can be made to the thousandth part of an inch; acquiring every-day knowledge that can be proved upon a slate or demonstrated by a microscope—do not let us, in the laudable pursuit of the facts that surround us, neglect the fancy and the imagination, which equally surround us as a part of the great scheme. [Hear, hear.] Let the child have its fables—let the man or woman into which it changes always remember those fables tenderly—let numerous graces and ornaments that cannot be weighed and measured, and that seem at first sight idle enough, continue to have their places about us, be we never so wise. The hardest head may co-exist with the softest heart. [Applause.] The union and just balance of these two is always a blessing to the possessor, and always a blessing to mankind. The Divine Teacher was as gentle and considerate as He was powerful and wise. You all know how He could still the raging of the sea, and could hush a little child. As the utmost results of the wisdom of man can only be at best to help to raise this earth to that condition to which His destinies, ordained by the blindnesses and the passions of men, would have exalted it long ago, so let us always remember that we are an example of blending the understanding and the imagination; and that following it ourselves, we tread in His steps, and help our race on to its better and best days. [Applause.] Knowledge, as all followers of it must know, is a very limited power indeed when it informs the head alone. But when it informs the head and the heart too, it is a power over life and death, and the body and the soul, and dominates the universe. [Great applause, during which Mr. Dickens resumed his seat.]

India—The Proclamation of the Queen—end of the Governor-General.

The Bombay mails of November 9th, reached London on the 4th of December. They brought the proclamation by which Queen VICTORIA's direct supremacy over India is finally substituted for the rule of the East India Company. As already announced the document was formally proclaimed throughout India on the 1st of November, and its reading was followed in the principal cities by illuminations, fire-works, and other demonstrations. The following is the text:

"VICTORIA, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the Colonies and Dependencies thereof, in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australasia, QUEEN, Defender of the Faith.

Whereas, for divers weighty reasons, we have resolved, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, to take upon ourselves the government of the territories in India, heretofore administered in trust for us by the Honorable East India Company:

Now, therefore, we do by these presents notify and declare that, by the advice and consent aforesaid, we have taken upon ourselves the said government, and we hereby call upon all our subjects within the said territories to be faithful and to bear true allegiance to us, our heirs and successors, and to submit themselves to the authority of those whom we may hereafter from time to time see fit to appoint to administer the government of our said territories in our name and on our behalf.

And we, reposing especial trust and confidence in the loyalty, ability, and judgment of our right trusty and well-beloved cousin and councillor, Charles John Viscount Canning, do hereby constitute and appoint him, the said Viscount Canning, to be our first Viceroy and Governor-General in and over said territories, and to administer the government thereof in our name and on our behalf, subject to such orders and regulations as he shall from time to time receive from us through one of our principal Secretaries of State.

And we do hereby confirm in their several offices, civil and military, all persons now employed in the service of the Honorable East India Company, subject to our future pleasure, and to such laws and regulations as may hereafter be enacted.

We hereby announce to the native princes of India that all treaties and engagements made with them by or under the authority of the Honorable East India Company are by us accepted, and will be scrupulously maintained; and we look for the like observance on their part.

We desire no extension of our present territorial possessions; and while we will permit no aggression upon our dominions or our rights to be attempted with impunity, we shall sanction no encroachment on those of others. We shall respect the rights, dignity, and honor of native princes as our own; and we desire that they, as well as our own subjects, should enjoy that prosperity and that social advancement which can only be secured by internal peace and good government.

We hold ourselves bound to the natives of our Indian territories by the same obligations of duty which bind us to all our other subjects; and those obligations, by the blessings of Almighty God, we shall faithfully and conscientiously fulfil.

Firmly relying ourselves on the truth of Christianity, and acknowledging with gratitude the solace of religion, we disclaim alike the right and the desire to impose our convictions on any of our subjects. We declare it to be our royal will and pleasure that none be in any wise favored, none molested or disquieted, by reason of their religious faith or observances; but all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the law; and we do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under us, that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of our subjects, on pain of our high est displeasure.

And it is our further will that, so far as may be, our subjects, of whatever race or creed, be freely and impartially admitted to offices in our service, the duties of which they may be qualified by their education, ability, and integrity, duly to discharge.

We know and respect the feelings of attachment with which the natives of India regard the lands inherited by them from their ancestors, and we desire to protect them in all rights connected therewith, subject to the equitable demands of the State; and we will that, generally, in framing and administering the law, due regard be paid to the ancient rights, usages, and customs of India.

We deeply lament the evils and misery which have been brought upon India by the acts of ambitious men, who have deceived their countrymen by false reports and led them into open rebellion. Our power has been shown by the suppression of that rebellion in the field; we desire to show our mercy by pardoning the offences of those who have been thus misled, but desire to return to the path of duty.

Already in one province, with a view to stop the further effusion of blood, and to hasten the pacification of our Indian dominions, our Viceroy and Governor-General has held out the expectation of pardon, on certain terms, to the great majority of those who in the late unhappy disturbances have been guilty of offences against our Government, and has declared the punishment which will be inflicted on those whose crimes place them beyond the reach of forgiveness. We approve and confirm the said act of our Viceroy and Governor-General, and do further announce and proclaim as follows:

Our clemency will be extended to all offenders, save and except those who have been or shall be convicted of having directly taken part in the murder of British subjects. With regard to such, the demands of justice forbid the exercise of mercy.

To those who have willingly given asylum to murderers, knowing them to be such, or who may have acted as leaders or instigators in revolt, their lives alone can be guaranteed; but, in apportioning the penalty due to such persons, full consideration will be given to the circumstances under which they have been induced to throw off their allegiance, and large indulgences will be shown to those whose crimes may appear to have originated in a too credulous acceptance of the false reports circulated by designing men.

To all others in arms against the Government we hereby promise unconditional pardon, amnesty, and oblivion of all offences against ourselves, our crown and dignity, on their return to their homes and peaceful pursuits.

It is our royal pleasure that these terms of grace and amnesty should be extended to all those who comply with their conditions before the 1st day of January next.

When, by the blessing of Providence, internal tranquility shall be restored, it is our earnest desire to stimulate the peaceful industry of India, to promote works of public utility and improvement, and to administer its government for the benefit of all our subjects resident therein. In their prosperity will be our strength, in their contentment our security, and in their gratitude our best reward. And may the God of all power grant to us, and to those in authority under us, strength to carry out these wishes for the good of our people."

PROCLAMATION

BY THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

ALLAHABAD, Monday, Nov. 1, 1858.

"Her Majesty the Queen having declared that it is her gracious pleasure to take upon herself the government of the British territories in India, the Viceroy and Governor-General hereby notifies that from this day all acts of the Government of India will be done in the name of the Queen alone.

From this day all men of every race and class who, under the administration of the Honorable East India Company, have joined to uphold the honor and power of England, will be the servants of the Queen alone.

The Governor-General summons them, one and all, each in his degree, and according to his opportunity, and with his whole heart and strength, to aid in fulfilling the gracious will and pleasure of the Queen, as set forth in her royal proclamation.

From the many millions of her Majesty's native subjects in India the Governor-General will now, and at all times, exact a loyal obedience to the call which, in words full of benevolence and mercy, their Sovereign has made upon their allegiance and faithfulness.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India. G. F. EDMONSTONE,

Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General."

Condition of Mexico.

From the London Times, Dec. 7.

When, some four centuries ago, the enterprise of Spanish navigators opened the vast continent of America to the admiration of Europe, the civilization of the New World was found to be concentrated in two spots, and two only, of that enormous territory. One of these favored regions was Peru; the other was Mexico. It was in Mexico especially that art, politics and science had received their greatest development. All the rest of North America, from the shores of Hudson's Bay to the mouth of the Mississippi, was desolate and barbarous, diversified only by swamp, forest, or prairie, and populated by savages without knowledge or laws. Mexico alone redeemed the character of the new continent, and presented to the eyes of the invaders a spectacle so marvelous as to satisfy even the expectations which the great discovery had raised. There the Spaniards found an organized State, an ancient polity, an opulent capital, an exalted dynasty, a formidable priesthood, and a people well skilled in mechanical and decorative arts. So great, in fact, was the proficiency of the Mexican workmen, so elaborate the system of Government, and so impressive the whole evidence of wealth and grandeur, that for some time the civilization of Mexico was regarded as superior to that of Europe. Although, indeed, the researches of modern inquirers have enabled us to apply some corrective to these ideas, it is really probable that in certain respects the Mexicans found Mexico more advanced than Spain, and we have incontrovertibly secured on the authority of a competent eye-witness that this civilization was the necessary product of geographical and natural advantages. Such was the situation and configuration of Mexico that it could hardly fail to make progress, and all that was discovered there in the shape of national wealth or political order guaranteed the extraordinary opportunities which nature had provided.

Such was the picture given of Mexico 400 years ago. Our American intelligence of yesterday gave us another sketch of the country, it is true, at the moment, and it would be hard to imagine a contrast more surprising. There is literally no spot in the entire American continent, from the Arctic Seas to Cape Horn, which presents such a spectacle of disorganization and ruin. The Indians of Patagonia are better ordered than the Mexicans of 1858. In the cold east of American civilization there is now no Government, no recognized polity, no guide to order. Life and property are insecure, and through the accident of a political revolution, or as the consequence of a transient commotion, not necessarily and permanently, from the utter default and break up of all the institutions designed for their protection. We cannot find in any European history—not even in that of Spain itself—any parallel or illustration of the present state of Mexico. The Roman Catholic hierarchy of Mexico are throwing such weight as they possess into the scale of absolutism, with the same views which have recently characterized their proceedings in various parts of Europe. But, except in these features, there is positively nothing to be discovered in the civil war now raging in Mexico which can raise it above the level of common and promiscuous brigandage. Society is resolved into its primitive elements without, as yet, throwing up even any savage virtues to the surface.

It would be too abstruse a speculation to inquire philosophically into the causes which have thus operated on a country so fair and so fortunate as to have once produced an exceptional civilization of its own in the midst of general barbarism. Historically, the case can be taken in at a glance. Spain ruled the subject State of Mexico for exactly three hundred years; then came three years of convulsion, and then some thirty years of Republicanism, on a remarkably pure and genuine model. Mexico had its union, its States, and its territories, its Chamber of Deputies, and its Senate. Biennial Parliaments and equal electoral districts gave to the popular suffrage all the reality which Mr. Bancroft could desire; and, except that there was no education and no toleration in religious matters, the institutions of Mexico were, at any rate in theory, as liberal as they could be. All this, however, was of no avail. The Mexicans can neither govern themselves nor find anybody strong enough to govern them; and the State, if it can still be called a State, is simply tumbling to pieces for want of anything like vitality or cohesion.

The ordinary interest which might attach to a spectacle like this is materially enhanced by two important considerations. On the northern frontier of Mexico lies a formidable neighbor already aggrandized by large acquisitions of Mexican Territory, and prepared for the absorption of more. What gives this contingency still greater weight is the fact that the internal politics of the North American Union will be intimately affected by any further annexation towards the South, and its wisest statesmen are apprehensive of the results which might ensue. Certainly, up to the present time the Government of Washington has exhibited considerable forbearance in dealing with the provocations to which the anarchy and license prevailing throughout Mexico have naturally given rise. We have, however, a more direct interest in the matter. English capital has been largely invested in Mexican undertakings, and English merchants have carried their energies to Mexico for the joint advantage of both countries together. The revolutionists, in their suicidal folly, have actually waged war against the peaceable inhabitants, the foreigners who were contributing to the resources of their State, and, though Englishmen who lend their money to foreign Governments do so on their own responsibility, British subjects may claim the protection of British power. The affairs of Mexico are nothing to us, but we are entitled to demand that its Government, be it what it may, shall abstain from visiting our countrymen with injustice or wrong.

The only apparent parallel to this strange break-up is that suggested by the case of Poland, and here the parallel is apparent only. Poland, it is true, was a turbulent and unquiet State, with a system of government which never worked evenly and smoothly, but, none, must have stubbornly resisted incorporation with the better organized politics on the frontiers. But the Poles had a nationality which gave them strength and purpose, and which for some generations enabled them to extend their territories at the expense of their neighbors. They once partitioned Prussia, and they once nearly annexed Russia. Moreover their disorganization, extreme as it was, had been in some measure, artificially created, and the spirit which even in this hour is not extinct showed what a genuine vitality the nation possessed. In Mexico there is not a trace of nationality. Of its seven, or eight millions of population about one million only are whites, the rest being Indians or mixed breeds; and these Mexican Spaniards have not succeeded, like the French Canadians, in preserving the spirit which they brought across the seas. Mexico has broken up from pure incapacity for self-government. The license which ensued on the extinction of absolutism 40 years ago has never been exchanged for any regular or stable Administration, so that what should have been a mere temporary suspension of authority has proved a permanent abeyance of order. Despotism might have relieved the country, but no Mexican has been strong enough for a despot, and affairs, therefore, have gone from bad to worse, with interminable convulsions, hopeless wars, losses of territory, and, at length, with such absolute political disorganization that no stage of decline can be more ruinous, and men are only looking to see what may follow.

The Atlantic Telegraph.

The following petition to the Government, relative to the Atlantic Telegraph, was very extensively and respectably signed in the Liverpool Exchange Newsroom: "The undersigned, being sensible of the great importance of communication by electric telegraph between this country and the continent of America, have learned with great regret that the Atlantic cable, the success of which was so recently hailed by the people of both countries, has by untoward circumstances been rendered inactive, if not altogether unserviceable; that a large further expenditure is required to restore its efficiency, or lay such other cable or cables as may be required for establishing permanently electric communication, the possibility of which has been so conclusively demonstrated, while the funds subscribed by the original undertakers of this national enterprise have been exhausted in the experimental and pioneering operations, which have effected this great though partial success. That the undersigned believed it would not be practicable, under existing circumstances, to raise the further capital required for completing this work, so special in its character and risk, without an offer of some collateral inducement, such as would secure to those embarking in it a moderate return upon their investment; and, such as the credit of the nation can alone supply in a complete and effective form. The undersigned further submit that, looking to the grandeur of the undertaking, to its special and exceptional nature and its importance to the Government of Great Britain and its dependencies, considering the capital and labor hitherto liberally expended by the undertakers without any return or commercial profit, it would not only be justifiable by precedent, but would also be for the benefit of the country, if Her Majesty's Government were to extend their aid to the enterprise in the form of such a moderate guarantee on a fixed amount of new capital, as is understood to have been asked by the Atlantic Telegraph Company, and as will induce the public to subscribe the requisite funds for completing this national and important work; more especially as we are informed that if in possession of funds or the credit asked for, the undertaking will be in a position to protect the national revenue by contracting, if desirable, with men of integrity and capital, who will relieve as well the Government as the Company from all or the greater portion of risk in an enterprise, which only requires this aid to render its success free from doubt and uncertainty."

Lord DERBY acknowledges the receipt of the memorial, and states that it has been laid before the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

THE OHIO TRUST COMPANY DIFFICULTY TO BE CONFIDENCED.—We understand that the attorneys for BELL & GRANT and those for SPRIGG & BROWN, have agreed upon a general basis for a compromise of the matters in dispute, and that the controversy will be settled without the further interference of the Courts, so far as the assets now in the hands of the Sheriff are involved. The details have not yet been arranged, but the propositions submitted at the last meeting of the creditors will be adopted in the main. This course will save the expense of litigation, prevent a further conflict of the Courts, and insure the creditors at least a small dividend upon the sums originally deposited, within a reasonable time. It is to be hoped that the rumored compromise will be speedily effected.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Madame Barrot, the mother of M. Odillon Barrot, and MM. Ferdinand and Adolphe Barrot, died Nov. 28, at the age of 93 years. She was the widow of the M. Barrot who voted in the Convention banishing Louis XVI. instead of beheading him.

We are requested to state that the Policeman, arrested in Troy for harboring counterfeiting implements, is not A. S. Brown, of West Troy, but Morgan L. Brown, of East Troy, a night Policeman.

The wife of the notorious Harlan Case has sued for a divorce from her husband, at Sandusky, Ohio, on the ground of willful absence during three years.

Col. Benjamin Loring, of Boston, now 82 years of age, is dangerously ill.

New-Haven, Friday Night, Dec. 24.

Gov. Dutton, in his cross-examination, first took up Mrs. Stowe, of the firm of Fields, Williams & Co.

Question—You said Hawthorne could believe I—answer yes or no, without explanation, the testimony, did the publication, about Common sewing.

Q—Did you ever tell any one that you did not get him as a compliment, but were surprised to hear she was a good man? A—I did not say Sir.

Q—At whose request, did Mr. Gillette go to Hartford? A—At the request of all the ladies.

Q—Did he go with you to a planing-mill? A—He did, about the time forgotten. He took my son to, I think, amusement in the meantime, when we got out.

Q—Did you have any conversation with him about the publication? A—I think not; there was nothing to talk about; the paintings were principally portraits and landscapes.

Q—Where did you become acquainted with Rock? A—At Mrs. Crowell's; but I never went there with him.

Q—Did you never go there with Mr. Rock at any time? A—Never I spent, I remember, tea at Mrs. Hollings, Mr. Evans, Miss Manderville and some others, went in company; I was with them at the time, and I believe Rock was along.

Q—Why did the Doctor not go? A—Because he did not cease to make himself agreeable; I told him I was going and knew he knew I was going.

Q—It was in the Summer of '57 you went to West Rock? A—In the Spring.

Q—What did Rock (according them)? A—At the Theatre; I asked the Doctor if I could go to the Rock.

Q—How do you know you did? A—I know I did; I never went out without his leave.

Gov. Dutton—Stop, madam. I want to confine your attention to this time.

Q—Did you think you gave up the Rock, did he? A—I don.

Q—On that occasion Mr. Dutton and Mrs. Bulinger went up together, leaving yourself and Mr. B. and the other lady together, I believe? A—Yes; meaning they were not all abreast as to be out of sight and then we would all be together again.

Q—What time was it—the three at the time of his insulting remarks? A—Just as we were through the seventy steps by the Rocks at Judge's Cave and sat down; we were a rod or two off.

Q—Did you return to your the left, his insulting proposition and your reply? A—I do not think they did; so many as I can recollect his talk was about his admiration of the Doctor; I always lady he ever met.

Q—Did you say nothing of marrying you? A—Not that I remember.

Q—Do you not Miss Sedgwick or Miss Manderville that Mr. Bennett made improper propositions? A—I do not think I did.

Q—He said your husband was a coward; did you resent that? A—No, because I knew it was true. [Laughter.]

Q—Why did you not call on the other gentlemen to defend you? A—I did not think best to have any scene at that time; and moreover, Mr. Dutton, I thought I could take care of myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. Blackman—That's the especially before folks.

Q—Did you walk down the rock that day with Mr. Rock? A—I may have done so; that was the last occasion I ever went with him alone, and I talked enough with him to let him know what I thought of him.

Q—Where did you become acquainted with Rock? A—At Mrs. Crowell's, Orange-street. I think; he never came back to the Theatre again.

Q—Did you not know Rock was dissolute? A—No Sir; he was a member of the College Church at that time, and was brought to the house frequently by my husband.

Q—About the letter you introduced yesterday. Did you hand it again to your husband after you found it in his vest-pocket? A—I did not, as I did not think it worth while to do so if he thought as more of it.

Q—Did you say anything to him, or he to you, about the letter? A—I do not remember that there was any conversation on the subject.

Q—Did you lock it up privately in your desk? A—I did not, because the Doctor had broken the key to my desk and I could not.

Q—How long after you reached Stamford did your husband get you the calico dress you mentioned? A—It was the next day after the first week.

Q—Where was it, then, you lose your all the time? A—The calico dress was not made up.

Q—Where was it you and Mr. Smith were found in the position you spoke of, you on his knee; what time of day? A—Early gaslight.

Q—How long had you been in the room alone with him? A—Time enough to let him put on his gloves.

Q—Do you mean to be understood that the cause of his sitting there was because he was too unwell to stand? A—I do believe that was the reason.

Q—Did you think it a particularly favorable time to sit on the floor when he was so unwell? A—I did I suppose, or I should not have seated myself there. [Great laughter.]

Q—How long did you sit there? A—No time at all; Doctor came in.

Q—You asked Doctor after you got back to George-street why he was not jealous? A—I did, as I did sometimes; I knew he was, though I had not the slightest idea he would do so.

Q—Was indecorous to Mr. Gillette, did he not take Sarah Bennett out and not ask them on an excursion? A—I think he did.

Q—Did he not sit near you? It was a very warm day. A—Then was just the reason he should not do so; daughter of his never sat near enough to me to fan me.

Q—Did he kiss you ever? A—He said this morning he did, and I suppose he did.

Q—Did you tell any one in New-Haven of it? A—No, Sir; I never did.

Q—Did he ever have any conversation with you about your being suited to Dr. Bennett? A—Never did any one talk at all pass between us.

Q—Did you ever speak to the house of taking money from the Doctor's pocket-book? A—I did not say I was in the habit of doing so; occasionally I did.

Q—Was you ever actually got caught in it? A—I did, because I was put into such close quarters.

Q—What did you do with the money—buy jewelry or dresses, or what? A—No, Sir; I did not; I bought a pound of dentine once, and never anything but what was absolutely necessary.

Q—At the time of your going to Auburn, who did you visit there? A—I visited Eliza Lewis, who has testified against me.

Q—Did you have any communication with her? A—Not very free.

Q—Did you talk about Horace Smith? A—I think we did.

Q—Are you prepared to say you never said you loved Horace Smith? A—(Very decidedly)—I never said anything that could construe into an expression of unlawful love.

Q—You remember that Horace Smith left the house alone time early in the morning? A—Yes.

Q—How long before breakfast did you get up on that occasion? A—I called Phebe, and probably saw Mr. S., before I called him out to his meal; I never told Mr. Lewis that he declared the loved me or clasped me in his arms.

Q—Did you never tell Miss Harter you corresponded with Smith? A—I think I did; and that I gave her to understand Doctor did not see the letters.

Q—Did you never say to Miss Harter of Mr. Webner while he was sick, that he loved you so that you were afraid he would commit suicide? A—No Sir; I never did and myself I had any such power over him [laughter.]

Q—Had never said that while Doctor was there, Webner sighed, and that when he was away you talked? A—Never.

Q—Did you never say that Doctor made Webner take his pay for tuition; and that he (W.) returned it to you? A—Never; the fact was not so either; Mr. Webner rendered a receipted bill to Mr. Bennett as a consideration for his kindness during sickness, and Doctor accepted it, very much to my mortification. Doctor would not have paid for the music I had either, had I not told him I should return it all unless he did pay for it.

Q—Did you never say that Webner once loved you, but that he had now become cold and indifferent? A—No, Sir; I never used the words "cold and indifferent" until I came to this trial; I have learned them by rote, however, from Doctor's witnesses?

Q—What time was it the indifference between yourself and Miss Harter began? A—In the Winter of '56 and '57.

Q—Did you ask Miss H. to assist you in securing warm property? A—I did not.

Q—Did you not in any way confide in her after the time referred to? A—I accepted her services when she offered to do things for me no one else offered to do.

Q—Was there any money borrowed of Mr. Blakeslee. A—I think there was; Mr. Dutton, I must explain about that money to you, or you will never understand it.

Q—Were you never in the room Eli Bennett described her? A—I have been there when Doctor took me there, but at no other time, for I did not know the way.

Q—Did you not write a letter to Eli Bennett on that particular subject to which reference has been made [Abortion]? A—No, Sir, never.

Q—Did you not read Miss Lewis's letter received from Horace Smith? A—I did, and can tell the passage; he said he was sorry my life had been cast on such a desert; (it was in answer to my complaints to him about my husband) I was not sure whether he meant that if I had married, his wife he would have treated me better, or that if he had had a wife he would have treated her better; he did say that he would advise me to do some thing to amuse myself.

Q—Did you not, after the petition was brought, go with the Doctor to get an overcoat at Mr. Fitch's?

A—I certainly did go with him, whether or not I was part on overcoat house, or all with, I do not remember.

Q—Did you not say to Mrs. North, wife of Mr. Gurdon, in Mr. Gurdon's office, or did you not say, you wished that her character was like that of Mrs. Ward and the same knowledge as Mrs. Ward possessed, or Mrs. Gurdon possessed, and could not have said any such thing to my husband.

Q—Why did you call on Mrs. North with Mrs. Graham? A—Simply to see her down to the cars; the last said, or rather, to see whether she would accompany me to my office the stores and have some oysters, for I could not allow any one to take such liberties with my name and character as Mrs. N. did.

Q—Did you have any conversation with Mrs. Ward about the testimony she would give? A—Mrs. W. came to my house shortly before I went to Cuba, and in conversation asked whether I had subpoenaed her; I told her I had not, and she said: "Then it must be that Doctor who has done so; I shall go to Massachusetts and give my testimony, for rather than see my husband sitting, Mrs. W. said: "We all know the Doctor is an unnatural—ashamed husband."

Direct examination—Judge Blackman—Q.—What else did Mrs. Ward say in the conversation you refer to? A—That she had never served in a family where a more interest so much with the business of her husband, Mr. Graham's presence, that his feelings towards his wife had changed, and that if she (Mrs. West) turned we, she must not look to him for pay; she told Mrs. Rockwell, before Mrs. Graham, about the Doctor's pulling her up when she lay down in the sitting-room, shaking her and telling her to get up and go sewing; she would come up stairs and tell me how the Doctor treated here; her last question was: she would, she said, pretend to the Doctor he sent me, and when she went on to tell about me, he would say, "No, no, I do not mean her, I mean that woman in Wooster-street;" she told of this to show how hard hearted the Doctor was.

Q—State about Miss Harter's proposal to you? A—She asked me after the petition was drawn, if I had got any of my Summer wardrobe from Boston; I told her "No;" and she said "Why didn't you?" I replied "I had no means of getting it;" she said she would advance me; I answered, "You can't, you are only a woman like myself, and we can't get away about money;" "Well," said she, "Mr. Sanford would help you; he detests the Doctor and would like to cross him under his foot as he would a worm; and I know an express man who hates the Doctor, and he will help; we will get the money and you can keep them till this is all over, but you know Dr. B. is too mean to give you, or to you if you knew them there;" I told her I would try to get my baby to take them away, so I told her where they were, and she said herself and Mr. Sanford, and her express man would go and get them and lock them to Mrs. Taylor's where she boarded, and that they were then subject to my command; Sanford took the clothes and turned them over to Doctor except a few fragments, and I have never seen them since. [Mrs. B. here said she was too much fatigued to proceed, and her examination closed, though there were one or two matters she would have wished to explain.]

Mr. Allis was asked how he had superscribed his letters to Mrs. B. for the last few years. A—Some I have superscribed to Mr. Blakeslee's care; for a year, perhaps, I did so, and perhaps no more than six months; I did so at my daughter's direction.

The Court asked the counsel for the respondent whether they wished to introduce any further testimony.

Gov. Dutton replied that they would like to recall two or three.

Mrs. Delia Ward was recalled and examined by Mr. Watrous.

Q.—It has been said you invited a gentleman up to see Mrs. B. when she was sick? A.—I never invited Mr. Smith nor any one else up to her room while she was sick.

Q.—Did Mrs. B. ever tell you that she had put her hand into the fire, and that she would hold it there till it was burned off? A.—Never; I have often heard her say that supposing she should get her hill, he was not because she wanted to marry again.

Q.—Did Mrs. Bennett say anything to you about her situation as adapted to commend her to the Court? A.—I do not remember if we said anything of the Court, but she said she thought it would excite sympathy.

Gov. Dutton—What about your going to Massachusetts to avoid appearing as witness? A.—I did say that I was going there, as I did not want to appear here.

Q.—Did you say anything about Dr. Bennett being a wretch? A.—Not that I remember.

Cross-examination by Mr. Blackman—Q.—When did Mrs. Bennett say anything about sympathy? A.—It was not when I was nursing her; she was going to leave the Doctor; it was when she lived in State-street.

Q.—Did she speak of the ordeal, she must pass through as an easy thing? A.—I think not.

Q.—Did she say anything about backing out? A.—Not at all.

Q.—She rather implied, then, that she meant to go on with it? A.—Yes, she did imply it.

Mr. Blackman—That is all we wanted.

Q.—Did you ever say anything to Mrs. Bennett about the Doctor being a wretch? A.—Provided her story was true, I said he was.

Q.—You certainly did not say anything about his being a clever fellow? A.—Oh, no; no—not at all. [Great laughter.]

Mrs. Charles W. Peckham was recalled.

Q.—From whom did you learn the name of the gentleman with whom Mrs. B. said she was in love. A.—Mrs. B. told me herself; Mrs. B. corrected me when on the stand the other evening; she turned around to me and said she thought I was wrong in saying Mr. —— was a good man. [Here there was a perfect explosion of surprise. Mrs. B. raised her head with an involuntary exclamation, protesting as earnestly as she could without words against the statement. Mr. Blackman shoved back from the table suddenly, calling out remonstrances from the gentlemen opposite. The witness persisted in her statement, though it was perfectly evident to every one that it was morally impossible for Mrs. B. to communicate with the witness in any way at any time, had she desired to do so, without attracting the attention of the Court or of the lawyer. No further questions were asked her.]

Mrs. Lewis was recalled.

Gov. Dutton—State the sentence of the letter Mrs. B. read to you about Horace Smith.

The Court—You must ask her whether she wishes to change her testimony. Repetition of former testimony can not be allowed.

The witness—I do not wish to change any of my testimony; what I stated was sacredly true.

Mrs. M. L. McCarthy took the stand.

Mr. Watrous—Did Mrs. B., in your presence, ever say Mr. Gillette kissed her? A.—She did, once; she remarked that she did not know, but she was going to have company over the Sabbath; she said that he told her she should never have been the wife of such a man as her present husband, and that, after saying it, he kissed her; as Mr. G. was coming up to stay over Sunday, to preach for Mr. Phelps, she feared he might come to their house, but she hoped he would not.

Q.—How about Phebe Williams' capacity as a seamstress? A.—Mrs. B. said Phebe was capable of cutting out dresses for the children, and of making them, and that she was a good seamstress.

Cross-examination.—Mr. Blackman—When did Mrs. B. say this about Phebe? A.—She had not been living there long.

Q.—What year was it? A.—I cannot undertake to tell what year it was, but should think it was three years ago; it might have been more.

Gov. Dutton—Did Mrs. B. tell you she knew where Phebe was the night she was shut out? A.—She said that Phebe told her she was under the cellar door.

Judge Blackman—Did Mrs. B. come to your house on the night Phebe Williams absconded to inquire about her? A.—She did; she asked if Phebe had been there; I told her she had, and that she had left at eight o'clock that evening.

Q.—Did you say to Mrs. B. that any member of the family knew where Phebe was? A.—I might have said I thought Doctor knew, but cannot say certainly whether I did or did not.

Gov. Dutton said they wished to ask Dr. B. a few questions of a private character, and the Court accordingly went into the room opposite.

Mrs. Edson Sanford took the stand.

Gov. Dutton—I understand you wished to make some correction in your testimony. You may now do so. A.—I misunderstood Mr. Blackman the other day; he asked me whether I had not said my husband had completely turned me around as regarded Dr. Bennett; if there had been anything said it must have been the contrary to this, as that very day of which this is stated I carried a letter to Mrs. Bennett, and could not have been unfriendly to her; when I called to see Mrs. B. she denied something she had formerly told me about Webner, and said that she was going to confess her love for Horace here in Court: I was surprised that she did not do so, this changed my mind about Mrs. B., if anything did.

Q.—Before that time did you suppose Mrs. B.'s confidence in you was lessened. A.—Not at all, as at that very time I was going to secrete her things for her; I told Mrs. B. that if I was called as witness I must tell all she had said to me.

Cross-examination—Where were these letters for Mrs. B. which came to your care mailed? A.—They were Western letters all of them, and Mrs. B. said they were from her sister.

Judge Blackman wound up the session with the usual call for Scipio Devonshire; but Scipio didn't come and the Court declared the case closed. It had previously been agreed among the counsel that the arguments in the case should be postponed for the present. The gentlemen representing the different parties agreed to limit their pleas to one hour and a half each. Connecticut law cuts them down to an hour, but Judge Waldo, on account of the length of time the case had occupied, stated that he would not be stringent.

The crier then adjourned the Court until Tuesday, Jan. 4, (one week from next Tuesday,) when the arguments will be heard—Judge Blackman and the Hon. R. J. Ingersoll for Mrs. Bennett, and Gov. Dutton and Gov. Baldwin for the Doctor. I cannot close my report without returning thanks for numerous favors received from the Editors of the Daily News.

GENERAL SCOTT AT CHARLESTON.—The steamship Marion, Captain FOYNES, reached Charleston on Saturday morning at 3 o'clock, having on board Lieutenant-General WINFIELD SCOTT, U. S. A. In company with him were Lieutenant-Colonel LAY, U. S. A., and Dr. WOON, U. S. A. As soon as the steamship reached the wharf he was waited upon by a Committee of six from the Washington Light Infantry, in full uniform. On entering the city he was received with every attention to his years and rank. The hotels were hung with banners, and the shipping in the harbor displayed their colors throughout the day. At 2½ P. M. a detachment of Washington Artillery, Lieutenant SALVO commanding, fired a salute of fifteen guns, the number due his rank, on Citadel Green. During the day he visited and inspected the works and arrangements of Fort Moultrie, and afterwards at Fort Sumter, and then returned to his quarters at the Charleston Hotel, and received the congratulations of many friends. In the evening he was escorted to the steamer Isabel, upon which he left the next morning for Havana.

The anniversary of the Battle of Trenton is to be celebrated at Trenton Dec. 27. An oration on the "Battle Fields of New-Jersey" is to be delivered by J. R. Freese.

COLORADO EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Preliminary Report of Lieut. Ives.

Washington, Monday, Nov. 1, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to submit, for the information of the Department, the following brief synopsis of a portion of the results of the expedition, organized under my command, for the exploration of the Rio Colorado of the West.

I sailed from San Francisco for the mouth of the Colorado River on the 1st of November, 1857, in the Quartermaster's schooner, used in transporting stores to the head of the Gulf of California. On board were the property and supplies belonging to the expedition, and also the materials for constructing a small iron steamer, to be employed in ascending the river. I was accompanied by a steamboat engineer and a party of seven men. The other assistants and employes took the steamer for San Diego, and crossed by land to Fort Yuma, which is on the Colorado, one hundred and sixty miles above its mouth.

The schooner arrived at the mouth of the river on the 2d of December, having been much detained by calms and head winds. The steamboat was hatched and launched on the 20th of the same month, and the ascent of the river was commenced on the day following. I continued up the river for five hundred miles, reaching, on the 11th of March, in lat. 35° 0', the mouth of a stream supposed to be the Rio Virgen, beyond which it was impracticable to proceed in boats. I therefore sent back the steamboat and the hydrographic party to Fort Yuma, and taking advantage of the permission granted in the instructions from the Department, left the river on the 23d of March, with a pack train, to examine, as far as possible, the country through which the Upper Colorado and its tributaries flow.

Keeping as near as possible to the river, I traversed the region along the 36th parallel, the greater portion of which had been previously unexplored. Most of the line of the 35th parallel was also visited. Following various lines of examination, gradually conducting towards the east, I arrived, about the 1st of June, at Albuquerque, on the Rio Grande, the distance accomplished during the land explorations amounting to nearly nine hundred miles. At Albuquerque the expedition was broken up, a few members of the party, still retained, returning home by the overland route to Fort Leavenworth.

During the progress of my work upon the navigable portion of the Colorado, the water happened to be, according to the evidence of those who had lived in that vicinity for many years, unprecedentedly low. An opportunity was therefore afforded of trying the experiment of steam navigation at the worst stage of the river, and at a time when the difficulties ordinarily to be encountered would be considerably magnified.

The region at the mouth of the Colorado is a flat expanse of mud. The lines of the shore and the channels that afford entrance to vessels from the Gulf are shifting and changeable, and bars, shoals and islands, composed of a semi-fluid mass, are in constant progress of formation and removal. The navigation for thirty miles above is rendered periodically dangerous by the strength and magnitude of the Spring tides. They have a rise and fall of from twenty-five to thirty feet, and a flow of extraordinary velocity. The flood is preceded by a "bore," or huge tide-wave, from four to seven feet high. In certain narrow bends it is very powerful and violent, but gradually loses its force as it ascends, and at a distance of thirty miles is scarcely perceptible. Along wider portions of the river are curves of the shore in which its force is not felt, and here boats may be safely moored till this dangerous wave has rolled by. Upon the shoals are formed what are called "tide-rips," where the sudden check given to the rushing volume of water causes it to bound along in high successive waves. Steamboats that come to the mouth of the river during the Spring tides must descend above tide-water during the ebb, and start to return two or three hours after the commencement of the flood.

The neap tides have a rise and fall of only ten feet, and a moderate velocity.

Between tide-water and Fort Yuma the principal obstructions to navigation are the sand-bars. These become more frequent and difficult as the river is ascended. The channel is exceedingly circuitous and constantly changing. The average depth is about eight feet. Shoals were frequently encountered, however, where there was scarcely two feet of water. Experience alone can afford the capability of navigating this portion of the river successfully. A knowledge of the locality of the channel cannot be imparted, as it has been known to shift from one bank to the opposite one in a single night. From the formation of the banks, from the appearance of the water, of the eddies, of pieces of drift-wood, and other floating substances, and of the islands and bars visible above the surface, a practiced eye can do much towards selecting the proper course; though boats rarely make a trip between tide-water and Fort Yuma, at the low stage of the river, without grounding many times a day. The bars, however, are composed of soft and yielding sand, and always be passed with more or less labor, depending, in a great measure, upon the skill shown in the employment of the different methods of extrication resorted to.

Below Fort Yuma there are no rocks. The snags are numerous, but seldom dangerous.

During the months of April, May and June, while the river is rising, and before new bars have had to form, the navigation is most easy. The average velocity of the current at low water is two and a-half miles an hour—during the July freshet from five to six. The river at this season is about ten feet higher than during the Winter months.

For three or four years an enterprising company has been engaged in transporting Government stores, in steamboats, from the mouth of the Colorado to Fort Yuma, and their persevering efforts have at last succeeded in overcoming the natural difficulties of the navigation so as to enable them now to perform their trips with entire regularity and certainty.

For one hundred and eighty miles above Fort Yuma the navigation has a character similar to that already described. The river passes through several chains of hills and mountains, forming gorges or cañons, sometimes of considerable size, and in these there is generally a better channel than in the valleys.

During the next one hundred miles gravelly bars are of frequent occurrence, and at some of them the stream presents almost the appearance of a rapid. In the interval between, in both valleys and cañons, are stretches of good river, and, although the bad places are worse, the channel generally is better than it is below.

For the succeeding fifty miles the river-bed is composed, in a great measure, of coarse gravel and stones, and many swift rapids were encountered. Upon several were found not over two feet of water. In this portion of the river there are a few sunken rocks that would be dangerous till their position became known.

The "Black Cañon," which is twenty-five miles in extent, is next reached, and in it the rapids are numerous and difficult.

Above the cañon the river is wide and shallow, and assumes the character of a rapid for so long a distance as to render any attempts to carry boats to a higher point almost valueless; and considering the difficulty, hazard and expense that would be incurred, at the low stage of water, in taking steamboats through the cañon, I am of opinion that its mouth should be considered the practical head of navigation. Up to this point the Colorado, notwithstanding the difficulties to be encountered, may be pronounced navigable. The experiment was attempted, as has been stated, at a time when the river had experienced an unprecedented fall. At most seasons of the year the navigation would be much easier and better, and a boat of suitable model and dimensions, and drawing, when loaded, but two feet, would be able to ascend the Colorado to the mouth of the "Black Cañon" with as much regularity and certainty as the steamboats now upon the river ply between the head of the Gulf and Fort Yuma. Although, during high water, the river experiences a great rise, the whole channel is not proportionately deepened. New bars commence at once to form, and at all seasons shoals are liable to be encountered. An iron stern-wheel steamer, one hundred feet long, and of twenty-two feet beam, built full and with a perfectly flat bottom, having a large boiler and powerful high-pressure engine, and drawing, when light, but twelve inches, would be the description of boat best adapted to the service.

Wood of excellent quality, for the purpose of fuel, can be obtained in abundance on the bank, at short intervals, between the mouth of the river and a point fifteen miles below the mouth of the Black Cañon. It is principally mesquite, willow, and cottonwood.

A reconnoissance, made from the foot of the Black Cañon towards the nearest point on the emigrant road to Utah, showed that a wagon-road might be opened between the trail and the head of navigation. For sixteen miles, while passing through the gravel hills and ravines that cover the eastern slope of the intervening range of mountains, the country is some what rough, and a little work would be required to make a good roadway, but, after reaching the summit, there would be no further difficulty. The distance from the river to the emigrant road is about forty miles.

The navigable portion of the Colorado runs nearly north and south. Near the Gulf the surface on either side is perfectly unbroken; the view being limited towards the west by distant spurs from the mountains of Lower California, and towards the east by the great Sonora desert. Further north broad valleys alternate with wild and rugged ranges of mountains of volcanic origin, that cross the river in almost parallel north-west and south-east lines. The cañons formed by the passage of the river through some of these mountain chains are probably unequaled in beauty and grandeur by any similar formations. In the Black Cañon, the deep and narrow current flows between massive walls of rock that rise sheer from the water for over a thousand feet, seeming almost to meet the dizzy height above. The tortuous course of the river, as it winds through these sombre depths, where the rays of the sun rarely penetrate, gives infinite variety to the majestic outlines of the overhanging masses, forming combinations whose colossal proportions and fantastic sublimity it would be impossible to figure or describe.

Above the cañon, in the vicinity of the mouth of the Virgen, is the most rugged and sterile region that I have ever beheld. Barren piles of rock, heaped together in chaotic disorder, and exhibiting on their broad surfaces no trace of vegetation, extend for miles in almost every direction. The volcanic upheavals, which have here their northern limit, appear to have experienced also their most violent action. Beyond, towards the north and east, the country is undisturbed, and a region is entered upon that presents totally new features and peculiarities.

This is a vast table-land, hundreds of miles in breadth, extending eastward to the mountains of the Sierra Madre, and stretching far north into Utah. To the extreme limit of vision immense plateaus rise, one above the other, the faces of the most elevated being from seven to eight thousand feet above the level of the Gulf. The surfaces of these plateaus, as well as those of the mountains, mesas, etc., in fact, of all the elevations to be met with throughout the country, have, by rays of wear and abrasion, and their variegated colors, a singularly striking appearance, which, at a distance, deceives the unwary spectator as to their size. Thus, what appears to be a mere knoll, rising from the plain, may, on approaching it, turn out to be a mountain, a mile in depth. The mighty streams of the Colorado and its tributaries, which, in the Spring, overflow the entire country, are fed by innumerable smaller streams, which, in turn, have their own subordinate tributaries, forming a system of drainage, perfectly beautiful in its extent, and whose picturesqueness it would be a delightful task to attempt to unravel. Twice only, after long and difficult climbing, views the eyes of the pioneers, and through walled approaches that seemed to be leading into the bowels of the earth, were the banks of the streams below finally attained. One plateau was on the Colorado itself, and the other near the mouth of one of its larger tributaries. Except at the place of descent, the sides of the river, as far as it could be seen, showed no place of practicable ingress or outlet; and the appearance of the torrent, foaming and surging along its rocky bed, left little room for doubt as to what would be the result of any attempt such as has been sometimes suggested, to explore the river in boats from its source above.

So numerous and so closely interlaced are the cañons in some some portions of this singular region, that they have displaced all but scattered remnants of the original plateau, leaving narrow walls, isolated ridges, and spires so slender that they seem to totter upon their base, shooting up to an enormous height from the sands below.

The natural surface of the country opposes insurmountable barriers to traveling in any fixed direction, and the aridity of the accessible portions of the table-lands rendered the exploration difficult. Towards the season of the year was the most favorable for finding water, much inconvenience was experienced from its scarcity, and it is doubtful whether, during the dry months, the examinations would have been prosecuted at all.

West of the Little Colorado, belts of cedar and pine forests somewhat relieve the general aspect of barrenness, but, traveling eastward, between that river and the towns of the Moquis Indians, the country becomes almost a desert. The immense stretches of sandy soil are broken only by ridges of brilliant red and yellow marls, that intensify the heat and the glare of the sun. The mirage, ordinarily existing in such localities, assumes, generally, the appearance of water, and is rendered peculiarly unpalatable from the known absence of this element over the whole region in question. Still further east the table lands begin to mingle with spurs from the Sierra Madre; the country becomes more broken and diversified, and the desert gives place to the habitable Navajo territory that borders the mountains west of the Rio Grande.

The Indians living along the lower portions of the Colorado, comprising the Cocopa, Yuma, Chemehuevis, and Mojave tribes, have become tolerably well known from the narratives of persons who have, within the last few years, passed through their territory. Their numbers have been, I think, over-estimated. Idle and inquisitive, they assemble en masse, at the first sight or news of the approach of strangers, and give an impression of a much larger population than really exists. The crowds that collected each day at the prominent points of the banks to watch the steamboat pass by appeared at first to present continual new sets of individuals, but it was found, after time had made familiar the portions of the faces that the paint and mud permitted to be visible, that the composition of the successive throngs was, in a great measure, the same. The Mojave tribe, which has been least exposed to intercourse with the whites, appeared to be considerably the most numerous. Their symmetrical proportions and stalwart frames have obtained for them the reputation, among all that have been among them, of being the finest race, physically, upon the Continent.

The region west of the Colorado, along both the 35th and 36th parallels, is almost uninhabited. Inconsiderable bands of Tonto Apaches wander, at some seasons, over portions of it, and are occasionally encountered. The two small tribes were found living in the pleasant cañons of the Colorado, corresponding, in appearance, to descriptions given of stragglers that have been met by parties crossing the country further south. There are but a few hundred of them in all, and they are a diminutive, wretched race. Their rude huts of boughs and stones are perched, like bird's nests, in crevices on the sides of the cliffs. Fish from the river, a scanty store of corn, wrung from some comparatively sunny spot in the dismal ravine, and what little game they can secure, constitute the resources which enable them to keep life in their bodies. Buried in the almost subterranean caverns, where alone they can obtain a permanent supply of water, most of them live and die, entirely isolated from the world above. Their lonely and monotonous life seems to have deadened every faculty and emotion. It might have been supposed that the approach of the first party of whites that had ever penetrated their retreats would have occasioned some sensation; but though the train of men and animals must have come down amongst them entirely unexpectedly, the novel spectacle excited no more apparent interest in the individuals encountered, than in the toads that were hopping about among the rocks at their feet.

The Moquis Indians, whose residences border upon the country of the Navajoes, were the first large tribe seen after leaving the Colorado. There are seven towns, dignified by the early Spanish explorers with the titles of cities, and ruins of others that are now deserted. The tribe is much smaller than has been sometimes stated. The number of the population has been supposed to be about seven thousand, but I should consider one-half of this an extravagant estimate. The towns are situated within a few miles of each other, and on the tops of isolated and precipitous hills. They are inclosed by walls of stone, and tolerably well constructed. The houses are built around an open court, and the only mode of entrance is by ladders that conduct to a small platform on the top of the exterior wall, upon which the doors and windows of the habitations open. Springs, near the summits of the hills, furnish a supply of water, and to provide against seasons of drought there are large stone reservoirs, exceedingly well made, placed in the hollows along the faces of the bluffs. Some of the towns are approached by flights of stone steps, and the steep ascent is laid out in neatly-arranged terraced gardens, the masonry of the revetments being kept in excellent order and preservation. Orchards of peach trees, bearing an indifferent quality of fruit, grow on the hill-sides. In the broad valleys below are acres of cotton, corn, pumpkins, and melons, whose cultivation, under great disadvantages of soil, climate, and agricultural outfit, exhibits a degree of industry that in an Indian is truly remarkable. Both men and women labor in the field. They possess a considerable number of sheep—nearly all of a jet-black color—and some poultry. The women wear a long black gown of their own weaving, and the men variegated blankets, the work of manufacture. They are a shambling, ill-made race, with pleasant though homely faces, and are perfectly peaceable and inoffensive. They seem, in suffering little molestation from warlike tribes, which is due, less to their own prowess, than to the natural defences of their towns, whose commanding position and difficult approach afford security against both surprise and assault. The progress they have made in agriculture and manufactures helps to maintain their peaceful relations; Indians from all parts of New-Mexico and from Utah having recourse to them for blankets, and, in times of scarcity, for provisions. Their unruly and powerful neighbors, the Navajoes, sometimes commit depredations upon them, but, even with these, an appearance of friendly intercourse is preserved. A curious fact was noticed, and illustrative of certain peculiarities of the Indian race, that the whole tribe do not speak the same language—the individuals in some of the towns absolutely professing to be unable to understand what is said by the residents of others.

A large portion of the Navajo Territory was traversed, but its inhabitants have become so well known, since the establishment of a military post in their midst, as to require no particular description.

A discussion of the agricultural value of the region explored, or its capability of sustaining a population, would involve many considerations, some of an intricate character, a fair exposition of which would require a degree of detail much beyond the limits of the present communication. A few general facts and conclusions can only be stated.

During the explorations all of the lands upon the Colorado, from its mouth to the 36th parallel, and the greater portion of the region along both the 36th and 35th parallels, between the Colorado and the Rio Grande, was traversed. Much of the country had been previously explored, and a considerable portion of it, particularly some of the open valleys of the Great and Little Colorado Rivers, and the Navajo country, pronounced by excellent authorities a good agricultural region, capable of a high degree of cultivation. Many facts were noticed during the examinations that tended to confirm this view, but many unfavorable features were also apparent. Of the valleys upon the Colorado, that of the Mojave Indians, which borders the 35th parallel, is by far the finest, and is perhaps the most promising-looking region in the portion of New-Mexico west of the Rio Grande. It was visited in the season of Spring, which, in that climate, is during the month of February. The atmosphere was indescribably balmy and delicious. A pale transparent haze of a peculiar delicate blue, which all must have noticed who have been in this valley, enveloped it with a softened glow. In brilliant contrast to the dark and frowning mountains on either side were groves of trees, with fresh and beautiful foliage, dotting the whole expanse of the foreground. Fields of wheat, corn, beans, pumpkins, and melons, promising a luxuriant crop, met the eye in every direction. Comfortable houses and well-built granaries, overflowing with the last year's stores, testified to the provident affluence of the inhabitants, and the robust appearance of the people themselves with their well-developed frames and solid, glossy limbs, betokened a high degree of health, comfort, and good living. That, for the number of Indians who now inhabit it, with their habits and mode of life, the country is an excellent one there can be no doubt. Whether it could ever be of much value to whites admits of a great deal.

The shifting of the bed of the Colorado would be a source of great trouble in so narrow a valley. The changes occur with a rapidity and to an extent that can scarcely be appreciated by one who has not witnessed them. Having passed through the country in the Spring of 1854, while accompanying the expedition of Lieutenant WHIPPLE for the location of a railroad route along the 35th parallel, I had an opportunity of observing the effects of this action, which were so great as to justify the inference that every portion of the cultivable bottom-lands is liable to be, in turn, overrun by the river. To the Indians, who have a certain community of property and interest, and no valuable improvements to lose, this is a matter of no vital moment, but the white settler would be much discouraged from putting up buildings and fences, and digging the ditches necessary for purposes of irrigation, by the knowledge that the river might at any day direct its course through his premises.

Freshets occur, at periodical intervals, which subject large portions of the valley to inundation. For five months of the year the rays of the sun are so intense and burning that no vegetation can withstand their influence, and, during the very early Spring, sometimes, when at midday there is an ordinary Summer temperature, ice formed at night. The growing season is thus rendered exceedingly short, and a single accident to a crop would, for the year, be without remedy. Seasons have occurred, within a few years, when the Mojaves have been subjected from this cause, to the extremity of eating their seed corn. The most elevated portions of the table-land, which are the most numerous, are composed of a soft, friable sandstone, which, under the action of the atmosphere, readily yields to the pressure of the hoof of the animal, and, by dint of wear and abrasion, are reduced to a fine impalpable powder, ready to be blown about by every breeze. Upon the surface of the plateaus, there is a mile in depth. The mighty streams of the table-land country are the Colorado and Rio Grande, the latter, however, has still vast tributaries, and these in turn have their own subordinate tributaries, forming a system of drainage, equally as extensive, and as attempts to unravel. Twice only, after long and difficult climbing, views the eyes of the pioneers, and through walled approaches that seemed to be leading into the bowels of the earth, were the banks of the streams below finally attained. One plateau was on the Colorado itself, and the other near the mouth of one of its larger tributaries. Except at the place of descent, the sides of the river, as far as it could be seen, showed no place of practicable ingress or outlet; and the appearance of the torrent, foaming and surging along its rocky bed, left little room for doubt as to what would be the result of any attempt such as has been sometimes suggested, to explore the river in boats from its source above.

So numerous and so closely interlaced are the cañons in some some portions of this singular region, that they have displaced all but scattered remnants of the original plateau, leaving narrow walls, isolated ridges, and spires so slender that they seem to totter upon their base, shooting up to an enormous height from the sands below.

The natural surface of the country opposes insurmountable barriers to traveling in any fixed direction, and the aridity of the accessible portions of the table-lands rendered the exploration difficult. Towards the season of the year was the most favorable for finding water, much inconvenience was experienced from its scarcity, and it is doubtful whether, during the dry months, the examinations would have been prosecuted at all.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The news from Washington is small in amount and unimportant in character. All public business, nearly, has been suspended until after the holidays, and both of the members of Congress as live too far from the Capitol to go home to their families, have taken the opportunity to pay a visit to New-York and Philadelphia, and see something of real Metropolitan life. Gen. HERMAN has returned home from Washington, after having had a satisfactory interview with Secretary CASS in relation to New-Granadian matters; and Señor MATA, the Juarez Minister from Mexico, has also left Washington for New-York, having failed to persuade the President to accord him an official reception.

It is stated that the French Chargé d'Affaires to the Dominican Government, M. REYBAUD, whose disclosure was announced some time since, had his passports tendered to him because he had informed the President that the Emperor Napoleon wished Hayti to reinstance their own government and come under that of the Haytiens.

The steamship Arctic, of the Vanderbilt line, arrived at this port yesterday from Havre and Southampton, after a perilous passage of 24 days. A brief account from Halifax of the storm in which Captain Krayenow lost his life and two of his officers were injured, has been already published; and to-day we give such particulars as have been obtained from a visit to the ship.

The steamship Karnack, destined for the new line projected by the Messrs. CUNARD, to connect New-York with Havre, via Nassau, New-Providence, arrived at this port on the 25th. She left Liverpool Dec. 4.

The steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool on the 8th Dec., arrived here yesterday. Her advices have been chiefly anticipated by the Pacific at St. Johns. We give, however, additional particulars of general interest, embracing the Royal proclamation to the natives of India; the Speech of the Queen of Spain, at the opening of the Cortes; and items and details from various points of Europe.

The Royal Mail steamship Asia is now over due at this port, with European advices to the 11th inst., three days later. Nothing had been seen of her at Sandy Hook at 3 o'clock this morning.

The steamship Washington, Capt. WELDE, with passengers for California, to go by Nicaragua or Cape Horn, left port yesterday, at noon. She had some 450 passengers.

The dates from San Francisco by the Overland Mail and not so late as have already been received by the steamer Quaker City. But the Australian dates are brought down to a later date than have been hitherto received. They are not very important. From the Fejee Islands come the details of a sanguinary and terrible cannibalism—of the arson of Government stores, cooking, and eating of two Europeans, in revenge by the natives of the island of Viwa.

Reports from the gold mines in Arizona continue to be very favorable. The last Overland Mail brings intelligence that the gold discoveries have extended, as far eastward as the Pimas Villages, which adjoin the district occupied by the Mexicans on account of our hundred and sixty miles along each side of the Gila River—the earnings of the miners ranging from one to one hundred and fifty dollars per day. Further discoveries of rich silver mines are also reported.

Francis Griffin, a young sailor, was murdered yesterday forenoon in a house of ill-fame in Roosevelt-street, by MICHAEL FLYNN, alias "Mickey, the Greek," a noted Fourth Ward rowdy. A dispute about one of the female inmates of the house led to the homicide. FLYNN was arrested, and an inquest will be held to-day. ISAAC P. SMITH, a colored man, on Saturday was stabbed five times by a white man named BERNARD KINNEY, and the wounds are pronounced fatal. On Christmas evening, JOHN TAYLOR stabbed his wife in Worth-street, and STEPHEN MAGE, residing in the same street, received a serious stab in the back from an unknown person, who made his escape.

There was a large fire on the south side of Staten Island last night, near the old Elm Tree, about five miles from the Vanderbilt Landing. But the extent of the damage done, we have not been able to ascertain. As there are none but farm-houses there, considerable distances apart, it is not likely that the fire could have spread. There are no Quarantine buildings in that vicinity.

A young man named CAMPBELL was accidentally shot by his own hand, at Amboy, on Friday, and survived but a few hours.

The City was exceedingly quiet yesterday; being the day after Christmas the whole population seemed to make it literally a day of rest after the fatigues and excesses of the day before. The weather was clear but cold during the day, but the wind veered to the eastward towards night, and a mingling of rain, snow and hail set in about 10 P. M.

OUR GOVERNMENTAL DEBATES.—The House of Representatives, on Thursday adopted, by a vote of 73 to 55, a resolution directing a special Committee

"To consider and report on the expediency of removing the present desks from the floor, and making such arrangements in the seats of members as will bring them together in a smaller space, for the purpose of better facility of hearing and more orderly debate."

There is not much probability that such a measure will be adopted, for the present arrangement of the seats and desks is too conducive to the personal comfort of members to be readily abandoned from any consideration of the public interest. But no one who has paid any special attention to the subject, and compared our debates with those of other countries, and of England especially, can doubt that great good would result from the change proposed.

The first to use have nothing like debates in our House of Representatives. We have plenty of long speeches, written political essays, partisan harangues, random talks about all conceivable topics, and occasionally a personal altercation and exchange of opprobrious epithets. But it does not happen once a session that any question of public policy is taken up, advocated by one side, opposed by the other, and discussed in the regular course of parliamentary debate. In the Senate these things are of rare occurrence, whenever and wherever a man—though the habit of talking, and even speaking, yet remains in growing general and encroaching rapidly upon the prerogatives of that body also. In the English House of Commons the regular course of proceeding is for any member to advocate a measure and to be answered by one on the other side—who in turn is replied to; and so the debate goes on, no member being allowed to speak more than once and the proposer of the controverted policy having the right to close. There are no writing desks,—no easy chairs,—no books or newspapers,—nothing but plain benches, so that every member is compelled to listen to the business in hand;—the result of this is that any person who speaks stupidly, ignorantly or superfluously, is speedily constrained, by the manifest impatience of the House, to stop.

With as any member may be as tedious as he pleases: for every other member, if he does not choose to listen, may write letters, read newspapers, direct documents or amuse himself at discretion. So that bad speaking is actually encouraged by the impunity accorded to it. From the space occupied by the desks and chairs, moreover, it is quite impossible for any person to speak so that all the members when in their places can hear him: the result is, that whenever any one is speaking whom they wish to hear, the members cluster around him and half the hall is left vacant.

We hope some action is to remedy these very serious evils may be adopted by the House. The resolution offered by Mr. MILES is in the right direction and will lead, at all events, to the consideration of the subject.

Piracy and Monopoly.

The daylight really seems to be breaking in upon the darkness of the Nicaraguan chaos. The political complications which have so long been permitted to hamper the freedom of commercial enterprise on the Isthmus are fast unraveling at Washington and San Juan.

Should the crazy schooner Susan, with her worse than crazy crew of banjo-playing and whisky-drinking pirates escape the dangers of the seas and the chance of police cruisers, there is good reason to hope that a speedy and satisfactory account of her and of them will be given in the Nicaraguan waters or on the Nicaraguan shores by the combined forces of England, France and the United States, in the name and at the request of the Nicaraguan authorities. Our own Government, supine so long, as it had nothing to fear in the matter but the public opinion of America, and no special stimulus to the work beyond the dictates of duty and of honor, has now began to move in the assertion of our laws, on finding that the other commercial Powers have resolved that the transit from the Atlantic to the Pacific shall no longer be vexed and harassed by scheming adventurers and reckless outlaws.

Things have been brought to this promising pass rather by the energy of the English and French diplomacy than by the pressure of those great interests in this country which have been trifled with and sacrificed by the temporizing unprincipled policy of President PIERCE and his successor.

But when England and France shall have done with us their work, these great interests must make themselves felt and heard if they wish to be permanently protected. After the filibusters of the moment shall have been thoroughly crushed out; after San Juan de Nicaragua shall have ceased to be a ward in the naval chancery of Britain; after the Mosquito king shall enjoy his own again, and the Bay Islanders shall have hoisted the haughty standard of Honduras over the cross of St. George, there will yet remain much to be done before the Nicaraguan Transit routes can be regarded as secured to the commerce of the United States and the world.

The people of this country, who have a great and growing stake in the security and facility of these routes, must declare war openly and prosecute it firmly against the twin demons of piracy and monopoly which have hitherto divided between them the virtual empire of the Isthmus. Neither of these tyrants is of foreign extraction. Neither British intrigues nor French ambition can be made responsible for them. They are our own—bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh; and if we wish to be rid of them, we have the remedy in our own hands.

The filibustering devil, who is, perhaps, the least mischievous and certainly the least contemptible of the two, is now, as we have said, in a fair way to meet with his deserts. The revival of the Slave-trade on our own coasts has coincided most fortunately in point of time with the last outbreak of the "Area-Extension" fever, to force upon the nation the issue of its claims to a national character at all. As the pirate sails out of a port of Alabama the slaver sails into a port of Georgia; and the Wanderer echoes the laugh of the Susan over the impotence of our Government, and the flimsy frailty of our laws. Like the distracted Lord Mayor of London in the Gordon riots, who complained in his despair, that "Folks turned Catholics a-purpose to vex and worrit him," an unhappy President holds up his tremulous hands in a kind of deprecatory misery, and bewails the "failure of our institutions." Something has failed certainly—but whether the institutions or the instituted, is a question still to be answered. The people must answer it. They must "pick their President and try again."

The devil of monopoly, although a "less erected spirit" than his brother, is yet hardly less audacious in his evil doings, and demands treatment not less decisive. And as the one is comfortably incarnated in General WALKER, so in the other in Mr. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT. As the fog that has been raised over all our steamship enterprises and failures of the last few years gradually lifts, the community is beginning to perceive that upon this person is likely to be laid at last the vast burden of responsibility for the disgraceful part which the United States has been made to play in the Isthmian history.

In the dramatic career of the old Nicaraguan Transit Company a fifth act is already opened which promises a dénouement of distributive justice. Ever since the control of the affairs of this Company, thrown into confusion by the action of General WALKER in February, 1856, has been lodged, by consent of the proprietors, in the hands of Mr. VANDERBILT, the position thus achieved by him has been used for the embarrassment and destruction of all healthy enterprise in the direction of the Isthmus. So long as the Stockholders of the Company could persuade themselves that this confidential agent of theirs was, however mysteriously, still really moving to perform wonders for their final indemnification and advantage, they were content to look quietly on and see him extort tribute from the whole Isthmian traffic in the shape of subsidies paid to him by the Pacific Steamship Company and the United States Atlantic line as detainers, to keep him and his steamers out of competition with their every trip. But they are a fleet, after all, it would appear, even in the credulity of stockholders, and this limit has been reached by the Nicaraguan Transit Company. They have appointed a Receiver to take charge of their interests; and they are now proceeding by law in our Courts to compel Mr. VANDERBILT into an account of the property intrusted to him as their President and representative. This suit will be prosecuted, we trust, with unrelenting vigor. This is due to the public and even to Mr. VANDERBILT as well as to themselves. For the revelations ahead would promise to culminate in the complete exposure of such a scheme of reckless and unprincipled gambling with the property of individuals and the peace of the world as will bring down upon all concerned in it an irresistible tempest of popular indignation.

It is already commonly understood that for more than two years Mr. VANDERBILT has been receiving a monthly subsidy of $40,000 from the Pacific Steamship Company and the Atlantic United States Company, in consideration of his withholding the boats of the Nicaraguan Company from competition with their lines. This subsidy has been further increased within the present year by a sum of $16,000 per month, paid to Mr. VANDERBILT as the price of his private compromise with Mr. C. K. GARRISON, (another steamship diplomatist,) whom he was ostensibly prosecuting for alleged damages done by him to the Nicaraguan Company. Of all this immense revenue, which could only have been received by him in his representative character, Mr. VANDERBILT renders, so far, no account whatever, nor of such further items as the sums paid to him by the United States Company after the loss of the Central America, for the use of the very boats which he was at the same time and by the same Company subsidized not to use at all! Of the large steam-property of the Nicaraguan Company, the whole has been gradually transferred by Mr. VANDERBILT to persons immediately connected with himself, apparently of his own motion, and without process of law. The result of all which is, that the Receiver now appointed by the Company, on taking possession of their effects and books, finds literally nothing whatever left of the interests and property representing altogether a positive value of about $2,800,000, which, hardly more than two years ago, passed into the keeping of Mr. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT!

If this were all, it would be enough and more than enough to fix the public attention upon the inquiry which is to determine the ways and methods employed with so much success for the extinction of so large a sum, and the ruin of so prosperous a Company as this of the Nicaragua Transit was when Gen. WALKER executed his little coup d'état. But while the Nicaragua Company has thus been melted down, absorbed, conveyed away, evaporated, all other attempts at opening new routes and developing a fair competition in the Isthmus travel have been effectually arrested, as there is reason to believe, by the same agency. And this at all risks; at the risk of the peace of Europe and America; at the risk of the serious commercial interests of the country; at the risk, sometimes, as in the recent case of the Washington and Hermann, of the health, the interests, the lives of hundreds of innocent and ignorant persons.

While we are pursuing piracy, then, at the South, let us not lose sight of monopoly at the North. If the dark things now to be brought to light, of this whole business, are what those who know them best affirm, the public will soon be able to understand the Nicaraguan imbroglio as it has never been understood hitherto, and to deal out justice with a firm hand upon the real offenders who have crippled our steam-marine, lowered our national character, thwarted our natural development, and brought us, once and again, to the very verge of disastrous war in a disgraceful cause.

The President and the Public Money.

According to the telegraphic reports from Washington already published, it would appear that Mr. COVODE, of Pennsylvania, threw the House of Representatives into convulsions of laughter on Thursday last by moving for a Committee

"to inquire into the facts charged by the President, and contained in a letter to the Centennary Committee at Pittsburg, that money had been spent in Pennsylvania to influence the State Congressional Election in opposition to his wishes; and to report the names of the parties implicated."

Why the House should ridicule such a motion we do not understand, since we cannot see where the laugh ought to come in. Upon authority which is, ex officio, the highest in the land, a charge has been made to the effect that in order to procure the condemnation of the Administration by a majority of the people of Pennsylvania at the late election in that State, money was employed to corrupt large bodies of citizens who would otherwise have voted for the party which sustains Mr. BUCHANAN. We must say that such an accusation as this, coming from so high a quarter, not only deserved but demanded investigation, and we are, therefore, at a loss to account for the "loud laughter" which followed Mr. COVODE's motion. The cachinnation may possibly be interpreted to mean an apology for the President, and to imply that he said in his haste what he would not have said in his leisure, or, in plain English, that his annoyance at the defeat of his Party in his own State, and the rebuke of his acts by the people of Pennsylvania, had drawn from him, in spite, a charge which could not be sustained in fact.

But, if this be so, there is all the more reason why such a Committee as Mr. COVODE asked for should have been appointed. We cannot see why Mr. BUCHANAN should be permitted, because he happens, unfortunately for himself and everybody else, to be President, to slander his fellow citizens by stating the thing that is not. If the House recovers from its convulsion of laughter sufficiently to take action on Mr. COVODE's resolution, we trust it will see the propriety of enlarging its scope. It should direct inquiry into the expenditure of money in aid of the Administration, as well as in opposition to it.

The fact is, that the people are pretty well tired of Mr. BUCHANAN and the official buffoonery with which he is constantly degrading his position. If he may claim to have any special views in regard to the possibly right means of governing this country, he surely cannot be said to have, or to have ever had, any distinct policy. The President began his official life with a series of magniloquent promises, which have been studiously belied by all his subsequent performances. He has applied his abilities, such as they are, to the discovery of courses of action capable of affording him the easiest and most practicable means of abandoning them under the pressure of outside influence, which has always been more important in his eyes than the intrinsic merits of his measures. And while he has been over a ready tool of such influence, he has always accorded the most apt obedience to its least respectable development. Where he should have shown statesmanship he has exhibited prostration; where he should have exhibited nerve and force of character he has prostituted weakness and indecision, if not positive imbecility.

In his inaugural address, in 1857, Mr. BUCHANAN laid down, in regard to Kansas, rules which he ignored in soon as the chance for so doing presented itself. He sent Mr. WALKER to the Territory, furnished with orders which were ostensibly in accordance with the declared will of the majority of the people; but the moment Mr. WALKER began to execute those instructions, the President, trembling before the clamor raised by the spokesmen of a Ministry, repudiated them, and attempted to disgrace the Governor of Kansas for having acted in conformity with them. The indignation which this vacillation excited among all classes of the people, was met by the President with an assumption of arbitrary power as ridiculous as it was gross and unbearable. He set out to ostracise and ruin every public man who took exception to his tergiversation, or who dared to adhere to views which the President had seen fit to abandon. Mr. BUCHANAN undertook, in a spirit which might have been called bold if it had not been positively insane, not only to ignore in this free country the right to the free expression of conscientious opinion, but even to ostracise those who indulged in it. That the Head of this Republic should ever have sought publicly to stifle the principle of freedom of opinion, is an anomaly which can only be accounted for by the ambitious folly of new-made greatness, which was unfit for greatness. That he should have persisted in such an attempt, in spite of the warnings of the public voice, is a folly which may well appear almost incredible. Mr. BUCHANAN constituted himself the autocrat of a political party, and aspired to become the autocrat of the whole nation. To say that he has miserably failed—that he has succeeded only to earn the public contempt, would be to say what everybody but Mr. BUCHANAN might readily have foreseen as the inevitable result of his conduct.

But the President's own words, which we extract from his Inaugural, furnish a sufficient example of the contrast between his promises and his performances, while they supply a powerful criticism on the objects which have almost exclusively engaged his attention since his accession to office. Says Mr. BUCHANAN, with a rhetorical flourish, which never meant anything, and was probably never intended to mean anything more than a little preliminary sacrifice on the altar of Buncombe:

"Next in importance to the maintenance of the Constitution and the Union, is the duty of preserving the Government free from the taint or even the suspicion of corruption. Public virtue is the vital spirit of Republics, and history proves that when this has decayed, and the love of money has usurped its place, although the forms of free government may remain for a season, the substance has departed forever."

Who, among all the nation, has done so much as the Head of the Nation during the past two years to destroy public virtue, or so little to preserve the Government free from the taint, to say nothing of the suspicion, of corruption? Who has so freely as Mr. BUCHANAN sought to substitute as a stimulus to ambition public money which is the reward of public service, for public virtue which is the spirit of Republics? If a servant of the country has dared to differ in opinion from the President, he has dismissed that public servant from office and salary, and transferred both to any one whose views coincided with what his own may have happened to be at the particular juncture. How much the hope of obtaining office and consequently a share of the public money, may have had to do in forming the private opinion of the friends so preferred to the posts of adversaries so dismissed, it is not necessary to question. The action of the President, in presuming to punish or reward men for opinion's sake, has supplied the greatest possible incentive to corruption, and it is this incentive which furnishes the text of the tirade from which we have quoted. Mr. BUCHANAN has done his utmost to destroy public virtue in the Republic, and when we have said this we have mentioned the chief feature of his Presidential career.

The President indeed appears to have no settled policy but that of employing corruption to coerce private opinion. He has invariably taken hold of every public measure with indecision, and has applied to its requirements some clumsy and ill-digested scheme, which he has abandoned almost before anybody else has succeeded to comprehend its drift. He has been a mere puppet in the hands of those who have gone to the trouble of abusing and humbugging him, and while he has shown himself constitutionally unable to look up to anything higher than party issues, he has steadily devoted his few remaining energies to the task of looking down to the furthest depths of the lowest of party tactics.

New-York in Danger.

The Boston Board of Trade has just prepared an elaborate report, the object of which is to deplete New-York of a very considerable portion of the business derived from the sales, by commission houses and agencies, of the products of New-England manufactories and workshops. Boston is not satisfied with the advantages resulting from the manufacture of cotton and woollen goods, but is extremely wretched that she cannot monopolize all the profits of the sale of these goods to Western customers direct. New-York, it seems, sells about $25,000,000 annually of New-England merchandise, which the Bostonians claim should be added to their own trade. They are not satisfied with selling their goods once, but insist that they ought to keep selling them. To accomplish this great object the Boston Board of Trade recommend that no more goods shall be sent here for sale, that all agencies shall be discontinued, and that no more goods should be manufactured than they can sell at home. They will do anything rather than suffer the mortification of seeing New-York outstrip them in the race for commercial supremacy. They confess that New-York is the great mart for foreign dry goods, but they contend that Boston might have contested even this advantage with her great rival successfully if Boston merchants had not employed their capital in a different business. The Report of these commercial Solons says:

"And, as relates to the rank of New-York as an importer of foreign dry goods, we have to remark, that, if she has gained any supremacy in this department, it is because those of our merchants, who were principally engaged in this business, gave their attention to American manufactures, rather than to the textile fabrics of England and of continental Europe; and, but for this cause, we should have continued to rival New-York in this class of imports."

This may be very true; but Boston having relinquished the foreign dry-goods trade to New-York, it was a necessary consequence that the domestic dry-goods business would follow after it, if there were no other reasons *for its centering here. It is much more con*venient and economical for merchants to make all their purchases in the same market than in two or three, and the only reason why the New-England manufacturers sent their goods here was because they made quickly sales and obtained ready prices, and the same powerful motive will continue to influence the same manufacturers, spite of the vigorous resolutions of the Boston Board of Trade. One other Boston correspondent, who believes that New-York may be effectually laid out by acting on the recommendation of the Board of Trade, suggests that by ticketing customers on to Boston free of charge a considerable number of purchasers might be induced to abandon New-York and buy their dry goods in the capital of New-England. There is some ingenuity in the suggestion, but the price of a passage from New-York to Boston would not be likely to influence many customers whose custom would be worth having. The additional temptation of a bottle of wine and a free lunch might have the desired effect. The Board of Trade makes use of a very singular argument as an inducement to manufacturers to discontinue the practice of sending their goods to New-York agencies. They say in their report:

"There are more but five millions of spindles; yet her customs, surpassing those of England in domestic and twenty of cities, are three and a half times the value of the raw commodity, and are considered by her merchants as among the sources of her greatness. And the application we would make of the facts, that as Boston is the nearest, so it may be made the actual, mart, for the vending of three-fourths of many cotton fabrics as are made in all the mills in France."

This application is not strictly logical, and in fact we do not discover what relation there is between the value of cotton goods manufactured in France, and the possibility of Boston monopolizing the sale of New-England fabrics.

Establishing agencies in New-York is not confined to New-England manufacturers; all the great manufacturers of Europe, or at least a very considerable number of them, have found it to their interest to do the same thing, because they meet a readier sale for their merchandise and obtain a better profit. It is said that there are twenty branches of Boston houses in New-York, which sell about twenty-five millions worth of goods annually; and it is estimated that the sale of this amount of goods leads to the sale of about sixty millions of dollars more, all of which, it is contended, Boston might enjoy by cutting off the branch houses which she has established here to her own ruin.

But, notwithstanding these jealousies of our Boston friends, we are happy to find that they still entertain very kindly and tender feelings towards us, and are very happy at having the distance between the two cities abbreviated, so that they be closer to us. There were great rejoicings at the Revere House, in Boston, on Thursday last, occasioned by the opening of a railroad from New-London to Stonington, which makes the distance from Boston to New-York shorter by about twenty minutes.

The Sacred Thirst.

The popular notion that Yankees are quite as fond of the almighty dollar as of the "Self-Denying Ordinance," or the Blue Laws of Connecticut, has just received fresh support from two remarkable incidents in the life of New England. JOHN RANDOLPH himself, who no doubt devoutly believed that if a cent were laid on one side of the most unpleasant chasm of which geography or theology gives any account, a Yankee would unhesitatingly risk the leap to pick it up, might have relaxed his grim features into a smile over that clause of a recent Boston will in which a large fortune is offered to a young Bostonian on the condition that he shall "give his word as a gentleman" to become the executor of the testator's worst passions upon his innocent posterity, to wreak enduring revenge upon a woman, and generally to act in a way of which no gentleman can so much as hear without a shudder of disgust. The faith in the power of gold must have been deep and strong which could dictate the offer of such a temptation to a person of respectable position. Nor less the faith of three other Yankees, who have just accomplished the ascent of Mount Washington in mid-Winter, under the stimulus of an execution granted against the owner of the hotels which smile upon the summit of that frowning peak. Never was an execution levied in the face of sterner obstacles. The seizure of the Summit and Tip-Top Houses must take rank in the annals of the law with the crossing of the St. Bernard in the annals of war.

It is not easy to levy an execution always in a populous Irish quarter largely inhabited by females; nor in a western village on the banks of the Mississippi among a people familiar with the use of the rifle and the revolver, and addicted to sunny meetings and Bourbon whisky; nor even in those wilder regions of our great empire, where the most domestic fight is hospitably free to all comers, and Sheriffs exultingly run their jurymen to panel with dogs.

But what are any or all of these trifling "law's delays" when compared with an uphill climb of nine miles or so, through snow-drifts of indefinite depth in the midst of an icy atmosphere so keen and steady as to have frosted the windows of the lone houses on the mountain's brow to the thickness of a foot and a half.

JUVENAL thought men must be stark mad to go sailing over the seas in search of a few bits of stamped silver. But times have changed, and we with them; and we should not be surprised to find the New-Hampshire deputies and their guide elevated into the position of popular heroes by some poet of their native land. For there must be poets, we suppose, even in New-Hampshire, since there are patent medicines there, and other themes of the lucrative kind now most affected by the Muse. And certainly Capt. MILES STANDISH had not half so hard a task either in his courtship or his Pequot War as these courageous individuals who plucked Winter by his icy beard in the home which should have been his castle, and laid their legal hands so complacently upon the snowy shoulder of Mount Washington. In this homage to the passion for pence there is really something almost sublime. If it should ever be the misfortune of the country to be drawn into a war with France or England, we submit that it would be the best thing we could do to take out an execution forthwith upon the Tuileries or Buckingham Palace in favor of some worthy citizen of Lancaster in New-Hampshire. Fleets and armies would be arrayed in vain to arrest the serving of that writ; and in the wake of the daring deputy who has attached the chilliest o the Appalachian giants, an eagle would find himself rapidly installed in the comfortable quarters of the drowsy British Lion, or the uneasy Gallic Chanticleer.

DRAWING IT RATHER STRONG.—We have expressed with considerable freedom our own estimate of the sacrifice of dignity involved in the President's meddling with the squabbles of our City politics. But the Washington States deals with the matter in still more lofty terms of deprecation. It says:

"An equal comprehension of the vastest concerns and the minutest details, belongs only to Omnipotence. We fear Mr. BUCHANAN has undertaken a task beyond human achievement. We are sure he descends sometimes from the lofty elevation of his conscious dignity when he stops to care for the complaints

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

FROM WASHINGTON.

[illegible]

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 26.

Gen. WALKER returned to New-York yesterday, after a short but satisfactory interview with Secretary CASS touching the New-Granadian affairs. He expresses for the consideration of Government an important dispatch which he has lately received.

Major PEATTIE, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, is absent in New-York.

Commander WILKES has made a lengthy report on the mineral character of Chatham County, N. C., with a view to establishing at that point a naval depot of construction. He describes the spot selected as almost ridiculously rich in coal and iron of the best quality.

Señor MATA, Secretary of Guatemala, is not accredited here in any official character. His business is private, though he comes in recognition and by his own observations touching Government business this intimate.

General JESUP anticipates receiving the Gadsden Treaty next week, fully ratified.

By the new rules prepared for the House of Representatives, reports from the Court of Claims are to be referred to the Committee of the Whole, and not to the Committee on Claims.

Señor MATA, the Juarez Minister from Mexico, has left Washington again for New-York, without having succeeded in effecting any arrangement for recognition by our Government, notwithstanding he is clothed with full powers to settle all pending questions on the most liberal terms.

Various reasons are assigned for the hesitation and vacillation of the President upon this point. The foreign diplomats say that Tassara is countenanced and Juarez opposed by the European Ministers in Mexico. Surely, there is no reason why our own Cabinet should be the only one in the world without discretionary power to act for itself upon a point of so much importance.

Another argument, which has been earnestly pressed against the reception of Señor MATA, is that Zuloaga has possession of the City of Mexico, the seat of Government, and that Juarez cannot exercise from the President an exercise of the Republic. This argument is being answered by reference to the fact that the forces of Guadalupe Hidalgo were negotiated with a Government then in exile from the capital—the latter being in possession of the United States troops, under General Scott.

The President is desirous convoked the Mexican Congress at the City of Queretaro to ratify that Convention; and although some hostility was manifested against it, no one ever thought of impeaching its validity because it was not made at the City of Mexico. General Gadsden, when Minister to Mexico, signed a whimsical precedent of independent action when he went to Cuernavaca to meet and recognize Arista as President of Mexico, while another man, who pretends, the tool of European Ministers, still held control of the City of Mexico.

But I believe the President admits that the objection—then urged—to receiving Mata, is untenable. It cannot however be avoided a delay for some time until new pretexts for procrastination were obtained. At this time, I understand, the Administration has private advices assuring them that Juarez will soon be displaced by another Liberal leader, who may hold some one else than Mata to represent this Government. Most assuredly if we wait until there is no responsible party holding of some new shifting of the political kaleidoscope in Mexico, the recognition of any Government there is likely to be an event of the very distant future.

The election of a United States Senator from Iowa, to succeed Mr. BRADLEY after the 4th of March next, is expected to occur on the fourth Monday in January. Gates Mr. BRADLEY cannot visit his New-Orleans home, it is rumored that Mr. BRADLEY has abandoned the fortunes of his colleague, and now favors the election of Hon. JOHN H. SANDERS, now a member of the House. It is very evident that Mr. BRADLEY is in the wells at New Orleans, and that the various elements of opposition to BRADLEY throughout the State are flocking to unite in Sanders's support. Under these circumstances the chances of the latter are decidedly good.

Reliable advices just received here by the Overland Mail, announce that the gold discoveries in Arizona have extended eastward to the Pimas villages—thus giving the gold district one hundred and sixty miles along both sides of the Gila River, where the miners are making from four to one hundred and fifty dollars per day. Additional very rich silver mines have also been discovered.

[FROM THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 26.

There is reason to believe that the Liberal Party at Mexico, who are seeking a recognition of the Juarez Government by our own, would consent to enter into a treaty by which the United States could establish military posts in Chihuahua and Sonora, thus avoiding collisions in a forcible possession, to respond by officially recognized.

A lately-received and reliable letter from Dominica states, as a reason why his passports were given to Chevalier RAYBAUD, the French Chargé d'Affaires, that he had officially informed the Dominicans of the wishes of Napoleon that they surrender their own form of government and submit to that of Hayti.

The most intimate friends of Mr. FOSTER say that he has no thought at present of resigning as Minister to Mexico.

An answer is expected by the latter part of January to certain propositions looking to a settlement of the Central American question, which were transmitted to England several weeks ago.

Letters have been received by the Overland mail. An officer at Fort Buchanan writes Dec. 5, that rich deposits of gold have been found on the Gila River for 100 miles on both sides. Six hundred and fifty men are at work, and five hundred are on their way from California. Should the emigration increase at the same rate as it commenced, it is supposed there will be fifty thousand persons in Arizona within the next twelve months. Specimens of silver ribbon, it is stated, from Heintzelman's mine have been discovered.

Judge HARE, writing from the Rio Grande, says that he has received letters from the leading men of Santa Fé, pledging their opposition to a Territorial Government in Arizona.

Prices of Mexican titles to land in Sonora have increased, the holders believing that the Americans will soon obtain possession of the country.

It is said that certain parties have anticipated the action of our Government, and obtained the right to construct a railroad from Guaymas to some point on the American line.

Lieutenant MAURY has addressed a letter to the Secretary of War showing the necessity, and asking for the establishment of a military post at the Pimas villages to protect emigrants and prevent collisions between the whites and Indians.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

[illegible] DAY.—The festival of Christmas was observed yesterday in the Metropolitan [illegible] in the Episcopal churches, in the Roman Catholic churches, and in most of the churches of other denominations, of Christendom. The churches were all closed, and in most of the churches Divine Service was celebrated. The Episcopalians, however, gave a description of the churches and other Churches which were decorated with evergreens, with holly and evergreens. In one church, that of the Holy Innocents, on [illegible] street, there was Morning Service at [illegible], and considering the hour, the children were well filled. In most of the churches instead of the rare and education of youth, the children were made happy with a good substantial Christmas dinner; but at the Five-Points House of Industry the festival was postponed, in consequence of the dangerous illness of one of the children. At the Chapel of the House of the Friendless, where some 300 or 400 children were congregated, the exercises were of a most interesting character. A large audience was present, and many brought gifts to the little ones. The children sang beautifully, and their clean appearance and happy countenances spoke volumes for the management of the Institution. The House of the Friendless is under the charge of females, and its affairs are under the direction of a Board of Managers. The school of the House School in Miss M. O. Lewis's Connected with it are two Industrial Charitable [illegible] Miss. M. J. Wasson and Miss Tucker are its principals. During the past year 479 children have been admitted to the Home. Situations have been procured for 60, and five or three hundred have received aid from the Home during the year [illegible]. The total number of persons who received aid from the Home during the year [illegible] down to 2,000. It is an institution which commends itself to the consideration of all, for its charities are practical and tend to relieve actual want. The Catholic Churches on Saturday were thronged with worshippers from five in the morning until one at noon. The early services, it being the nearest approximation to the old midnight mass which has been generally abandoned in the Middle Street, attracted large crowds. The Chapels, the Chapels of the Episcopalians, were decorated with evergreens mingled with Scriptural devices. Very liberal collections, we understand, were taken up for the benefit of the poor. In the evening the principal places of amusement were tolerably well filled; but most people, on Christmas night, prefer the quiet enjoyment of home to the brightest attraction that can be offered abroad.

VERY SUCCESSFUL PERFORMANCE OF STEAM FIRE ENGINES.—On Christmas day the steam fire engine the Superintendent of Fire Apparatus, Mr. JOHN F. LEVERSON, to test their projectal powers beside the new Lever-pole lately erected on the corner of Franklin-st. and West Broadway. The engine started [illegible] J. C. Cary and John G. Storm were ordered out from the Novelty Works at 9½ o'clock, and arrived upon the ground in about twenty minutes after, without the aid of men or horses. These Engines are locomotive and are capable of propelling themselves [illegible] fires, while they carry, at the same time, from fifteen to twenty firemen. One of Cary's Rotary Pumps are attached to an internal-[illegible] shaft that revolves while the machine is in motion, and is rendered fit for service at a moment's notice by the removal of a single key which disconnects the shaft of the pump from the driving-wheel of the carriage. The John G. Storm was first tried with a 1½ inch nozzle, and her performance exceeded anything that could have been expected. The water reached with ease the top of the pole—a perpendicular height of 100 feet. Considering that this was her first trial, the performance was very satisfactory indeed. The J. C. Cary engine being on the ground, and the firemen having seen something of her extraordinary power, heretofore, resolved to put her to work, and the performance of this engine exceeded any thing ever yet recorded in the history of Steam Fire Engines. A stream from an 1⅛ inch nozzle was thrown to the surprising altitude of 210 feet, and a horizontal distance of 229 feet. A two-inch nozzle was also thrown to the cap, a perpendicular height of 160 feet. A half stream 2¼ inches in diameter was next tried and the distance attained was [illegible] feet, throwing 1,200 gallons per minute. The [illegible] proved to stagger the old Firemen and they appeared to enjoy the overwhelming floods projected from the machine, although a hostile feeling has been in the past, and with some of them against any thing in the shape of a steam fire engine. [illegible] said it was no use to kick against steam any more, when such demonstrations as these were made; and the most doubting ones were forced to admit that the great superiority of the steam fire engine. We consider this a most successful trial, and we only hope they may be brought into active service as soon as possible. RICHARD F. [illegible], Foreman of Engine Company No. 42, conducted the trial of J. C. Cary. The measurements were made by Mr. LEVERSON, Superintendent of Fire Apparatus, and SAMUEL MUNN, Esq., Foreman of the Hydrant Company.

DISPERSION AFTER NATIONAL THEATRE.—The customary Christmas services were held last evening at the Church in Christian street, and the house was well filled. The house contained a well-dressed and respectable assembly of ladies and gentlemen; in the second and third tiers there were few ladies,—the audience being composed of young men who appeared to be greater of a mixed character, but who paid strict attention to the discourse. The pit was crowded with young men of the middle class from the ages of six to twelve, who required to be kept in order by four policemen with batons, and by as many more in the galleries armed with formidable rattans. Even here, however, there were a few who were quietly and attentive. The service consisted of singing, prayer, reading of the Scriptures, and a sermon by the Rev. Mr. HIGGOS, from the text—"Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." The meeting was, on the whole, orderly, considering the pit, where the constant attention of observers deter, and the occasional talking of a boy by the way, did not promote devotional feelings, at least among the youthful portion of the congregation. The opening hymn was well sung, most of the audience joining in it. The benediction had been pronounced, and people started for the door, as they had scarcely time to do when the curtain falls on the scene.

FIRE IN WALL-STREET.—About 6 o'clock on Saturday evening, a fire was discovered in the fourth story of No. 59 Wall-street, in the rooms occupied by Mr. CASSIDY, Bank note engraver. Mr. CASSIDY sustains a loss of $3,000, which included the destruction of some valuable machinery and newly-engraved bank plates. The fire had evidently been burning way since the previous evening, and was not extinguished until the building had been saturated and the upper floor burned through. The other losses result from water, which deluged the entire building from top to bottom. The third floor was occupied as lawyers' offices, whose furniture and [illegible] all damaged by water. The second floor is occupied by the Illinois Central Railroad Company, and the first floor by WARREN & SON, brokers, and HAYWARD, MAGUIRE & HARRIMAN, brokers; the first floor is occupied by the Park and Indemnity Fire Insurance Company, and PERZEL, CASTRIZZI & Co., fruiterers. PARTIAL ACCIDENT TO A RAILROAD CLERK.—On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Geo. W. BURR, one of the clerks in the office of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company, attempted to leap from a steamboat to the pier, but falling to reach the pier, he fell into the water, striking his head against one of the lower piles, and received a concussion of the brain, which caused his instant death. The deceased was going to leave for his home in New-Jersey, to enjoy his family, a Christmas dinner, when the accident occurred. He was a native of Connecticut, and a graduate of Yale College, and a few years since was principal of one of the Public Schools in this City. Coroner GUMBY yesterday held an inquest upon the body, and a verdict was rendered in accordance with the foregoing facts. The body was last evening taken to Southampton for interment.

FIRE IN BROADWAY.—According to the report of the City Inspector there were 245 deaths in the City during the past week—a decrease of 20 as compared with the mortality of the week previous. Of the whole number 129 were of 20 years of age and under, and 85 females of the public institutions. Among the principal causes of death were consumption, 37; infantile convulsions, 23; dropsy in the head, 14; inflammation of the lungs, 24; inflammation of the brain, 10; infantile cholera, 8; cancer, 12; scarlet fever, 19, and congestion of the brain, 11. The nativity table gives 90 natives of the United States, 72 of Ireland, 19 of Germany, 7 of England, 3 of Scotland, 2 of France, 1 each of Italy, Prussia and Holland, and 1 unknown.

[illegible] Kiernan, in attempting to arrest the [illegible] who had broken down, and otherwise roughly handled, but he succeeded in making the arrest. The quarrelsome person was locked up.

PARTIAL ACCIDENT TO A RAILROAD CLERK.—On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Geo. W. BURR, one of the clerks in the office of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company, attempted to leap from a steamboat to the pier, but falling to reach the pier, he fell into the water, striking his head against one of the lower piles, and received a concussion of the brain, which caused his instant death. The deceased was going to leave for his home in New-Jersey, to enjoy his family, a Christmas dinner, when the accident occurred. He was a native of Connecticut, and a graduate of Yale College, and a few years since was principal of one of the Public Schools in this City. Coroner GUMBY yesterday held an inquest upon the body, and a verdict was rendered in accordance with the foregoing facts. The body was last evening taken to Southampton for interment.

FIRE IN BROADWAY.—According to the report of the City Inspector there were 245 deaths in the City during the past week—a decrease of 20 as compared with the mortality of the week previous. Of the whole number 129 were of 20 years of age and under, and 85 females of the public institutions. Among the principal causes of death were consumption, 37; infantile convulsions, 23; dropsy in the head, 14; inflammation of the lungs, 24; inflammation of the brain, 10; infantile cholera, 8; cancer, 12; scarlet fever, 19, and congestion of the brain, 11. The nativity table gives 90 natives of the United States, 72 of Ireland, 19 of Germany, 7 of England, 3 of Scotland, 2 of France, 1 each of Italy, Prussia and Holland, and 1 unknown.

[illegible] ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.—JOHN FARRELL, an Irish laborer, who resides in Eighth-avenue near Forty-seventh-street, was attacked to death on Saturday from a piece of sand which stuck in his windpipe. He leaves a wife and family. At a coroner's inquest, held yesterday afternoon, the deceased, a verdict of accidental death was rendered.

[illegible] FIRE.—The stable of THOMAS [illegible] Forty-fifth-street was set on fire, about 7 o'clock, yesterday morning. There were three horses in the stable, one of which was burned to death. The total damage amounted to $[illegible]. It is not known who the incendiary was.

[illegible] Reports.

[illegible] HOUSE OF ILL-FAME.—ARREST OF [illegible].—A murder was perpetrated at 11 o'clock yesterday morning in the house of ill-fame No. [illegible] Roosevelt-street. The murdered man was [illegible] Michael Flynn, who, [illegible] the house, a noted desperate character of the Fourth Ward. The cause of the difficulty [illegible] the parties of course of [illegible] the girl, whose name is Mary Noonan, went into her room on the third floor, and was followed by the two men. Flynn claimed that he spoke to her first, and Cutting insisted that he was the first who addressed her. Flynn ordered Cutting to leave, and Cutting extended the same order to his rival. Neither would leave, and a pitched battle was the result. It seemed to be tacitly understood between them that the weaker of the two should succumb to the stronger. Cutting saw that he was getting the worst of the battle, and after receiving a few vigorous blows from the president elect of Flynn, left the room and ran down stairs, Flynn pursuing him, and, overtaking him on the second descending flight, drew a knife and plunged it into his neck. Cutting fell to the floor, the blood spirting in a stream from his neck. He lived only a few minutes, for the main artery of the neck was severed. Immediately after the murder, Flynn fled. The Police were notified of the occurrence, and started in pursuit of the escaped murderer, but did not find him until several hours afterwards. He was secreted in a low den in Water-street, and at first showed a determination to resist. He was, however, captured, and taken to the Fourth-Ward Station-house and locked up. When found, he was smoking a cigar, and on being shown the body of his victim, pulled away with the most hardened unconcern. The body of Cutting was taken to the Station house of the Precinct where the murder was committed, and an inquest will be held upon it there to-day. The deceased was about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a neat and tasteful sailor's suit. He had only lately arrived in port, from a long sea voyage. He is said to have parents living in Vermont, who are highly respectable people. Flynn is an Irishman by birth. He is about 30 years of age, and formerly worked in a bakery; but for years past, according to report, he has done little else than make himself notorious in low groggeries and in miscellaneous fighting on election days.

LATE RIOT REWARDS AT WORK.—James Griffin, Chas. Mears, and James Ferris, are three youths who reside in the Fourth Ward, and whose rum-drinking, and rowdyish proclivities have for a long time been known to the Police. During Christmas-day and evening, they took more than their average amount of drinks. About midnight they were in splendid working trim for a jolly row. They went into the sailors' boarding-house, No. 20 Chestnut street kept by John Crockett. Mr. Crockett was in bed, but the youths routed him from his slumbers, and compelled him to stand treat to a bottle of wine. The wine drank, they attacked Mr. Crockett, one of the number knocking him prostrate with a "bung starter," a heavy wooden hammer which happened to be lying on the bar. Two or three sailors came to the assistance of the landlord, and they in turn were roughly handled. William Dudley, one of the seamen, was struck several blows upon the head, and has been nearly insensible ever since. Having laid everything level, the youths fled. Late yesterday afternoon Griffin was arrested, but the other two have thus far managed to keep clear of the police.

A DOMINICAN GENERAL ROBBED.—Gen. Cabral and Ex-President Baez, of St. Domingo, arrived here a few days since in the brig Flying Eagle, which is now lying at pier No. 5, East River. Ex-President Baez, it will be remembered, took rooms at the St. Nicholas Hotel, while the General remained on board the vessel. On Saturday morning the fact was discovered, that during the night some parties had entered the cabin, stole the General's trunk, took it out to the dock, and stole from it about $300 in gold coin, a gold watch, and other jewelry valued at $400 more. Several of the hands employed on the vessel were arrested on suspicion of being the robbers, but were discharged on the ground that there was no evidence to warrant their arrest.

FOOLHARDY FATAL STABBING.—Yesterday afternoon, a man named Bernard Kinney, who bears an unenviable police notoriety, assaulted Isaac P. Smith, a colored youth, at the corner of Grand and Wooster streets, stabbing him five times with a dagger. Kinney was arrested and locked up. The colored youth was taken to the City Hospital, and his wounds are pronounced mortal. The boy is unable to give any account of the affair leading to the murderous attack, and Kinney sullenly dogged silence to the matter.

[illegible] AGAIN.—Several months ago, a most desperate burglar named Benjamin Leak, was tried and convicted of burglary in Westchester County, and was sentenced to five years' imprisonment at Sing Sing; but while confined at White Plains, he managed to break jail and escaped to this City. He eluded detection until last week, when it was communicated to Detective Elder that he was secreted at No. 213 Church-street. Detective Elder, assisted by Officers Keefe and McCord, accordingly went to the house in Church-street, last evening, and arrested Leak, whom they found in bed, and he was taken to the Police Headquarters and locked up. In the possession of Leak was a splendidly-finished jimmy.

ANOTHER MAN STABBED.—A gang of Italians were quarreling last evening, about 7 o'clock, in Baxter-street, when one of them drew a knife and stabbed Maltano Santo ten times in the face and body, inflicting several dangerous wounds. The Police hastened to the spot on hearing the disturbance, but the assailant fled, and was not arrested up to a late hour. The wounded man was taken to the Hospital, where his wounds were dressed. He is a tailor, and lives in Canal-street.

MORE STABBING AFFRAYS.—On Christmas eve, John Taylor, living in Worth-street, had an altercation with his wife Ann. The wife was the larger of the two, and John, seeing that he was likely to get the worst of the fight drew a clasp-knife and stabbed his wife in the neck. He was arrested, and she was taken to the Hospital. On the same evening, Stephen Mack, residing at No. 163 Worth-street, was stabbed in the back by some unknown person, who made his escape.

AN EXPENSIVE BARGAIN.—Cornelius Higgins, of No. 163 Worth-street, paid $3 and three drinks for $50 worth of clothing, stolen from the house of Charles Moran, in the Sixth Ward. The thief and vendor was Thomas McGlyn, an active and efficient member of the Dead Rabbit fraternity. The Dead Rabbit member congratulated himself upon having made a good speculation, and Higgins assumed the bargain a peculiarly profitable one for himself. The personal congratulations of the duett subsided yesterday upon their both being arrested and locked up for trial.

Amusements.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Annual Performance of the "Messiah" by the members of the New-York Harmonic Society, attracted a splendid audience on Saturday (Christmas) night. The performance has become so much a matter of routine, that it does not, we apprehend, excite a great amount of enthusiasm among the members. We are led to this conclusion by the fact, that the members were but thinly represented. The performance on the whole, lacked spirit, deriving its interest from the solos, rather than the choral and instrumental force. Miss BEAKNEAR, Miss WESTERVELT, Miss COLEMAN, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. PHILIP MAYER were on the bill.

The Promenade Concert at this House on Friday evening was not a success.

LAURA KEENE'S THEATRE.—"Our American Cousin" continues his brilliant career, and will appear every evening this week. On Wednesday afternoon a special performance will be given in aid of the Mount Vernon Association. The farce of a "Loan of a Lover" will be produced to-night, for the purpose of introducing Miss Laura HONEY to our public.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—Mr. WALLACK's successful Shakespearian revival of the "Merchant of Venice" will be played every night this week.

BURTON'S THEATRE.—Mr. BARRY SULLIVAN, the eminent tragedian, enters the second week of his engagement here to-night. BULWER'S celebrated comedy of "Money" will be played, with Mr. SULLIVAN and all the leading members of the company in the cast.

NATIONAL THEATRE.—COBB's Ledger story, called "Alaric, or the Tyrant's Vault," in a dramatic shape, is the principal attraction here. The drama called "The Bohemians of Paris," and a comic pantomime, are also on the bills.

BOWERY THEATRE.—Another dramatic version of COBB's "Alaric" will be produced here to-night. Mr. BROUGHAM's burlesque of "Pocahontas," with the pièce de résistance comedy of "Love in Livery," will also be played.

BARNUM'S MUSEUM.—The Zavistowski Pantomime Troupe and the Wren comedians announce new and attractive programmes for the Holidays.

MINSTRELSY.—WOOD'S and CAMPBELLS' are the best establishments in the City.

PANORAMAS.—BANVARD'S of the Holy Land, and the representation of the Overland Route to California. Both these works of art are worth seeing.

The Game of Billiards.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S CHALLENGE AND AN AMERICAN'S READINESS TO ACCEPT.

A newsitem which states that MICHAEL PHELAN, of this City, has accepted the challenge of J. ROBERTS, of Liverpool, England, to play a match for a large stake and the Championship, has been extensively circulated for some days past. We find, upon inquiry, that this paragraph is not strictly correct. The facts of the case are as follows:

A short time since Mr. ROBERTS published a card, in which he offered to play any man in England or America, a game of billiards, on his own table, at a hotel in Liverpool, for £500 or $1,000; he, ROBERTS, to give his opponent an odds of twenty points, in a string of one hundred. The ambiguity of this challenge can be readily observed even from the few words we have quoted. What game of billiards does the challenger propose to play? Nearly all the prominent nations of the world have their national game; and at any of the prominent rooms on Broadway a spectator may positively witness the American, French, English, Russian and Mexican games, all being played at the same moment. Of course the first is the game pursued in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred; yet scarcely a game has been introduced on a billiard table which is not occasionally played in New-York. The fact cannot be disputed, that no game calls for more scientific ability, both in judgment and execution, than the "Three ball Carombole," or French game, and it is equally certain that the English "winning and losing" game is among those favorite games. Mr. ROBERTS, in his challenge, specified the French game, which was adopted by Messrs. PHELAN and ROBERTS, at their first match, played at Philadelphia a few days ago, when the former gave ROBERTS twenty points out of sixteen, and beat him nine games out of eleven. On its republication of Mr. ROBERTS' challenge in this country, Mr. PHELAN at once addressed a communication to the editor of Porter's Spirit of the Times, in which he says, after alluding to the vagueness of the challenge:

"I will play Mr. ROBERTS, in this City, within one year from this date, at the Three-ball French Carom game, on one of my tables, balls to be not less than 2 5-16 inches in diameter, for not less than $2,000, ($10,000, if Mr. ROBERTS should desire it,) at least four months' notice to be given me of the acceptance of my proposition, and I will allow him $200 toward defraying his traveling expenses."

From this arose the statement that the challenge was accepted.

We learn from Mr. PHELAN that no person can be more anxious than himself to have this match come off. After beating BOZANSKI, he offered to play any man in the world for $5,000. This challenge has never been accepted. Some time since the Detroit and other Western papers published long articles, in which it was given out that one JOHN BOZANSKI, ("Dutch Hans,") had accepted, and that the preliminaries of a match would be arranged without delay. After waiting some weeks, and having heard that the money was ready, though without official information on the subject, PHELAN ventured to drop Mr. BOZANSKI a letter, inviting him to "come up to the scratch." This letter remains unanswered, and the Detroit match turns out to be mere talk. If Mr. ROBERTS means play, Mr. PHELAN is certainly most anxious to meet him, and no difficulty can stand in the way of a match. Possibly Mr. BOZANSKI, the great French champion, has never seen Mr. PHELAN's challenge, which reads as though it were open to him as well as to any other man.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

The Affairs of Kansas—Its Politics—Its People—Its Soil—Its Towns—Elwood—A Romance in Real Life.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

GRAND WESTERN HOTEL, ELWOOD, K. T., Tuesday, December 18th, 1860.

No storm was ever succeeded by a calm more profound than that which has followed the political tempest that, not long since, swept over the emerald plains of Kansas. Peace is now as universal as was contest; harmony, as was discord; industry, as was idleness; and prosperity as was wastefulness and ruin. The merchant, the artisan, the mechanic, and the agriculturalist have engaged assiduously in their respective avocations to retrieve lost time and means, and to advance the interests of the commonwealth to that position which will soon rank her among the powerful and wealthy States of the Confederacy. So rapid is her increase of population under the present auspicious condition of things, that she will attain the required quota in another year, and so extensive are her improvements in every productive and industrial department, that she will be able to maintain her sovereignty whenever it shall be declared.

The political sentiment of Kansas is decidedly Free-State; but the majority of that party are far from being Abolitionists. Persons who came, or were brought here with one predominant idea, have become practical observers and independent thinkers, and they know the fallacy of such a sentiment. Having seen the operations of free and slave labor in their respective localities, they are satisfied that slave labor will be employed only where it is most productive, and can never, under any state of things, be forced into uncongenial climes, or into unproductive soils. They know that slave labor is indispensable to the cultivation of cotton, hemp and sugar, while manufactures and the growth of cereals and esculents are better yielding under the care and labor of the white man, and that the limits and boundaries of each will be fixed, simply and only, by the question of profit.

The people of Kansas seem to have come from every habitable portion of the globe, and are breaking the virgin sod, building towns, and settling themselves in permanent habitations. The soil is dark, deep and porous. It is easy of cultivation, inexhaustible in fertility, quickly dried upon the surface after rains, but holds the water in its bosom, which it yields by capillary attraction as it is needed by the thirsty vegetation, and thus prevents the blight which would otherwise be occasioned by long-continued droughts.

The towns of Kansas are innumerable, and most of them are styledcities, whether they contain one, or a hundred houses. Many of them have existence only upon paper, while some again are large and thriving villages. Of the latter, Elwood is one of the most promising, and from the eligibility of its position and great local advantages, bids fair to become the chief commercial metropolis of the future State.

Situated directly opposite St. Joseph, it is placed by the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad in direct communication with the great populous and wealthy cities of the West, and, by the first of April, will be within fifty hours' travel of New-York. It is the starting point of the railroad chartered to Palmyra on the South Pass route to Salt Lake and California, and of the St. Joseph's and Topeka Railroad, which will command a greater portion of the trade of New-Mexico. It lies upon the West Bank of the Missouri, on the verge of an extensive, elevated and thickly wooded bottom, which requires no gradiage; its streets are broad and rectangular, and its levee can be approached with safety by the largest boats, and is sufficiently spacious for an immense commerce. It has a number of stores, many mechanical shops, a printing office, which issues a weekly sheet of excellent editorial and news; two saw-mills, one of which, recently erected by Mr. LOVETT of Maine, is said to be equal to any in the country; a grist mill; two or three hotels; several boarding houses, a good school, a church, and about 1,200 inhabitants.

The place is named in honor of J. B. ELWOOD, Esq., a lawyer of Rome, N. Y., who was one of its founders. Its principal population are from that and adjoining States, and comprise men of character, capital and talent. A. L. LEE, Esq., of Lee, Chaffee & Co., bankers, is the son of the Hon. M. L. LEE, of Fulton, N. Y. Major HOUSE, of Pittsburgh, is Mayor; D. W. ELMER, of New-York, and F. A. OSBORNE, of Pennsylvania, are Attorneys; the Rev. Mr. RYAN, of N. Y. is Episcopal Minister; Smith & Co., lumber-merchants, are of New-York; and so on, to too great a number for enumeration.

This Hotel kept by WEBSTER & FRANKLIN, is one of the most commodious, well-furnished and pleasant houses of entertainment in the far West, and Elwood is so great a thoroughfare, that it is constantly filled with persons from all parts of the country, who sometimes meet strangely enough, and under circumstances of peculiar interest. A short time since a little incident of the sort occurred, which has so much of romance that I will give it for the entertainment of your readers. With some amplification and coloring, it would make quite a story.

A young gentleman arrived in town from a long pedestrian tour of the Territory, and stopped at this hotel and asked for a single room, where he could have rest and quiet. He was tall and finely formed; his eyes were blue, his hair was of a golden tint, and, despite his soiled garments, his prostration from fatigue, and the tan which exposure on the open plains had wrought upon his face, he was handsome, looked well-bred, and gave unmistakeable evidences of social cultivation. But he was not social. He appeared to be wholly engrossed with some melancholy subject of his own thoughts, which gave to his face an expression of interesting sadness.

Several of our hospitable gentlemen and sympathetic belles endeavored, by kind civilities and gentle courtesies, to allure him from his gloomy isolation; but he was invulnerable to all their advances, and would stroll alone through the forest which bordered the town, with its thousand hues, traced by the colorings of Autumn on the brilliant foliage, or seclude himself within the limits of his chamber through the entire day. At the end of a week he prepared to depart for his home.

In the adjoining room to the one that he occupied, a young lady had been confined for several days by indisposition. Her father, who brought her to the Territory several weeks ago, was on a farm in the interior, and left her in these comfortable quarters until he could complete his dwelling and prepare it suitably for the reception of this, his only child. She became so far convalescent as to be able to approach the window just as the stranger was taking his solitary departure. The sun was bright, the air was balmy, and she leant upon the open casement. The tall, retreating figure caught her eye, and fascinated her gaze, although the soiled clothes and the black carpet bag, swung on a stick across his shoulder, rendered it strange to her.

Involuntarily, in an audible tone, she hummed one of her familiar airs. It reached the ear of the stranger, who turned as suddenly as though impelled by an electric shock, and stood like a statue, with his eyes fixed upon the open window, whence, with an exclamation of surprise, the young lady had instantly withdrawn herself. He immediately retraced his steps into the house and asked if Miss A. was there. An affirmative response induced him to lay down his carpet bag and send up his card. In an hour she met him in the drawing-room. Her recovery was miraculous. His improvement in costume and vivacity was as wonderful. They were together every day, and in three weeks were married, and soon after left for your city on a visit to his friends, whence they will return in the Spring, to settle permanently in this place, where, after a painful separation they were reunited and their felicity was consummated.

Madam RUMOR, who pries into all secrets with an avidity equaled only by her garrulity, has informed our citizens that this young couple met early in July at Newport, for the first time—he from New York and she from Massachusetts—that they became deeply enamored of each other, and walked and rode and waltzed together every day. She was with the family of a relative, who expected to remain the season, but was called unexpectedly away, while our young friend was out on a yacht expedition, which an adverse gale had detained beyond the period of its expected return. It was late at night when his little bark touched the beach; but he hastened to his room, changed his attire, and proceeded to the ball-room, with anticipations bright as the brilliant chandeliers, to give a glad surprise to the lady of his love, and to tell her of his perilous struggles with the fearful elements. He inquired with thrilling accents for Miss A. [illegible] the wilderness [illegible] the waves, [illegible] and waited and [illegible] days for a reply. None came. He went to her home and learned that her father had sent her for Kansas on the day before.

Returning to New-York, he made arrangements to come to Kansas, and, soon arrived in this new country. Landing at Leavenworth, he made inquiry there; and then to Lawrence, Topeka, [illegible] towns he went, to be still disappointed, and finally broken down in strength and spirits, could not he take railway back to his home. The rest is told.

A Word About Hair Restoratives.—The original, as it is still the best, preparation for restoring gray hair to its original color, and rendering it strong, healthy and beautiful, is Reinstreet & Co.'s Inimitable Hair Coloring or Restorer. Every other preparation advertised for this purpose is but an imitation of this. Most of them are made with water, and require the expense of a hair-dressing to accompany them, as they leave the hair harsh and dry. Reinstreet's is made of the old stimulating spirits, affording an agreeable hair wash, aside from its value as a restorative. It is sold at a reasonable price, placing it within the reach of all. We might introduce certificates sufficient to fill this paper, selected from those received from Clergymen, Senators, and well-known citizens in all parts of the country, but it is not necessary. We leave our readers to judge that if IMITATIONS can produce comparative successful results, the ORIGINAL and imitated article must surpass them all. Price 50 cents a bottle. Sold everywhere.

W. E. HAGAN & CO., Proprietors, Troy, N. Y.

HEGEMAN & CO. retail it, and FARMER & PARK, CARY, HOWARD & SANGER, and JAMES T. MAXWELL wholesale it.

Special Notice.—Dealers in Goodyear's patent for vulcanized rubber suspenders, braids, webs and all other fabrics and articles made by combining fibrous substances with threads or sheets of vulcanized rubber, are cautioned that, unless the same are properly stamped or labelled with my name and by my authority, they cannot be legally disposed of in the United States. Merchants and dealers are invited to examine specimens now in store, and to give their orders for the Spring trade to the undersigned, exclusive owner of the title and exclusive rights of the patent for these goods, which embrace all the styles heretofore manufactured or imported, and many others. Also, licenses to manufacture and sell, and the terms, may be obtained on application to me at No. 23 Cortlandt-st., New-York.

A WINTER WARNING TO SUFFERERS FROM COLDS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, PLEURISY, INFLAMMATION OF THE LUNGS AND CONSUMPTION! USE ROSSWOOD'S FLORAL EXTRACT for the cure and relief of all pulmonary disorders. It is the greatest discovery of the age, and is now first made known and universally to the public through the columns of this and other leading journals. It was discovered upon the Alpine pastures of Switzerland, from feeding the herds cattle by the cheap grating thereon. Those suffer from diseases of the lungs, and their instinct pointed out the [illegible] Sunday Walk in the German Quarter.

[illegible] Is it not? It seems [illegible] Sabbath, [illegible] Ten Commandments enjoined the observance of their laws, did they not? We pay [illegible] Police Commissioners enforced the observance of these laws, did they not? We pay [illegible] Police force, do we not? The measure [illegible] Sabbath is recognized as a good gauge of [illegible] morality in any community, is it not? [illegible] German quarters of New-York, and [illegible] the "Odeon." It is about the hour of the [illegible] service, when Rev. Dr. —— is giving his people a graphic picture of Sanhedrim, and [illegible] in behalf of missions to China or Africa. [illegible] here in the Bowery, are tempted to all the gods of fun and folly, from Bacchus to Terpsichore, with innumerable waltzers, and incense [illegible]. The Odeon is most very [illegible] but very popular. A long slab on the right [illegible] Bacchus; another on the left is consecrated to the God of the Chase; another, over [illegible] to Terpsichore, a tetablarde, and games generally. The main hall is devoted to Melpomene and Thalia. The libations are peculiarly American-German, in quality and quantity. Lager-bier, and a [illegible] of it, instead of being poured on the altars of [illegible] deities, after the primitive mode, which might be wasteful and entile some jealousy among the [illegible], goes down the throats of the devotees, young and old; and either the vision created by the contact of the liquid with a heated surface assists and fills the eye, or some weed of Virginia origin is burned freely, and stands out its odors, so can [illegible] with which, and intended are the sumes of lager and [illegible] delight the nostrils of the gods and goddesses of the place.

[illegible] Odeon presented a strange [illegible] to an American eye on that Sunday afternoon. [illegible] two hundred men, women and children (a [illegible] of the latter) were ranged along three [illegible] of tables—all drinking lager, or something worse, [illegible] at the same time to a "merry play in [illegible] Kingdom," with orchestra, billiards, [illegible] collation, &c.—and all for ten cents. In the [illegible] theatrical performance for a crowded [illegible], Dancing, gymnastic exhibitions, speech-[illegible], and a flood of lager-bier—such was [illegible] place.

[illegible] in the Temples Garden, (Volks Garten,) a door or two below in the Bowery. A [illegible] admission fee to the place, but you can [illegible] children with you "free." The [illegible] are attending a "sacred [illegible] Concert." But you [illegible] a little skeptical about its "sacred" character when you read the programme and observe the surroundings. "The place is suspicious—" Vaudeville [illegible] "The entertainments are suspicious." "Ex-[illegible] d'agrement pas pourrit." "The Avriet Family, [illegible] the Theatre—a Comic Opera [illegible]." This is for 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The evening performance commences about as "[illegible] Marriage, or a Secret Passion, [illegible] in one act." "Concluding with "Good [illegible], Mr. Hacker—vaudeville in two acts." "Between Acts the Grand Ballet, and Grand Janitzary Concert, with a grand orchestra." It all looks very grand but not very sacred. Then the visitors at the City Theatre adjoining are informed by the programme that when that is closed, (say at 11 o'clock,) [illegible] Temples "Theatre free—to test the quality of the Freyhit' lager.

The surroundings are even more suspicious than the [illegible]. A half-dozen billiard tables, more or less, five swing stands, a roulette table, a shooting gallery, and some other forms of gambling—all in full [illegible]—would not seem to promise a very "sacred" [illegible], in anything of five or six hours fully manned [illegible].

The company does not give very marked indications [illegible] "sacred" pleasures attracted them by hundreds to the place. We counted 400 in the afternoon, including children, seated in front of lager-bier kegs, [illegible] alternately to the band of music and the [illegible] and some of them seemed to be imbibing anything [illegible] "sacred" than had "lager." In the evening there must have been fully 1,100 in the same place, engaged in the same way. If the proprietor would drop one letter from his programme, and [illegible] his announcement a little, thus: "Sacre d'[illegible]," it would be more frank, and vastly more truthful.

[illegible] People's Theatre, as well as People's Garden. It is in Fourth-street; let us look in there. What a spectacle in a Christian City! As you come, on the ground floor, there are four billiard tables, surrounded by perhaps a hundred boys from 10 to 20 years of age, occupied with and intent upon the game. At one table four lads, not more than 15 years old, are playing—albeit it is somewhat difficult for them to reach the balls. But they will grow [illegible] as high, by-and-by, that their feet will dangle in the air. Across the room, and in front of the bar, stands a novel gambling instrument. It is a small brass cannon from which balls are propelled, probably by a spring, and entering a numbered aperture a few feet distant, deposited by an [illegible] plate on which stand small wooden pins. The balls are given you, say at three cents each. The holder representing the ball that upsets the highest number of pins wins 50 cents—the balance of the stakes, constituting the whole—going into the pocket of the proprietor. This machine was surrounded by as many lads as could see it, and betting was as common as the machine could be made to work. The spirit of the gambling hells at Hamburg and Wiesbaden was in full play in these young scrapes, and the conditions, locale of Sunday, [illegible] the Temples.

[illegible] yet entered the Theatre proper. [illegible] Sunday—free to all, not withstanding [illegible] the proprietor on seeing some [illegible] guests. In the rear is a hall [illegible] accommodating, in its way, 1,000 people or more [illegible] music, lager-bier, and theatrical performances. [illegible] 5 to 9 o'clock, notwithstanding the afternoon [illegible], the people were streaming in, ordering [illegible] beer and cigar, and getting ready for the play. [illegible] one-half of the company consisted of women [illegible] children. We saw hundreds of boys and girls of [illegible] 14 to 20 years—chiefly of German parentage, and [illegible] who could be recognized as Irish and American. In all, there were 800, by actual count, entering [illegible] single place between the hours of 6 and 8 o'clock. The expense to each guest cannot average less than 25 cents, and is probably twice that amount; so that [illegible], at the lowest estimate, would pass from the [illegible] pockets of the apprentices and journeymen and [illegible] seamstresses, who seemed principally to make up the [illegible], into the full purse of the proprietor of this den of iniquity. And when the pinching cold comes, you and I, good friend, will have our sympathies appealed to to relieve the poverty caused by this Sunday dissipation, or to provide for the destitute orphans, [illegible] the cost of criminal [illegible] growing out of this Sunday [illegible].

[illegible] turn down Bowery, and [illegible] the Temples proper. [illegible] Sunday, [illegible] for you at the door by a [illegible] shortly afterward you will find a spacious hall, say a hundred and [illegible] feet square, with galleries all around, and tables for the accommodation of 1,500 or 1,800 people. A band of music of fourteen [illegible] pieces, rings out well-toned airs which may be [illegible] for sacred music. Strolling attendants [illegible] tea and the usual means of refreshment [illegible] are at hand. Above stairs you will find [illegible] seven billiard-tables, occupied mostly by [illegible] playing with their own or their companions' money. It was at an early hour in the evening that we visited this establishment, and there were not more than 200 persons present. Later, it was [illegible]. Till twelve or one o'clock, perhaps, [illegible] hard-working householders must listen to the [illegible] and to the noise of those revellers. Is it [illegible], is it right, to deprive families of their [illegible] in this way?

[illegible] to return to the Bowery, and drop into the [illegible] Temples Garden. It is in Fourth-street; let us look in there. What a spectacle in a Christian City!
